ABSTRACT

Intended for use with or without counseling help, this occupational exploration guide is organized around 12 interest areas, 66 work groups, and 348 subgroups of occupational titles. The interest areas (an expansion of John Holland's six occupational categories) represent the broad interest requirements of occupations as well as the vocational interests of individuals. Within each interest area are work groups (occupational clusters) suitable for exploration by those who have a particular interest. Each work group section contains descriptive information and listings of jobs by "Dictionary of Occupational Titles" (DOT) name and code. Information on each work group is presented under the following question headings: What kind of work would you do? What skills and abilities do you need? How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work? How can you prepare for and enter it? What else should you consider about these jobs? Appended is an alphabetical listing of all DOT titles and codes listed in the guide. Other appendixes explain how the twelve interest areas were developed, describe the U.S. Employment Service (USES) Interest Inventory (under development) and its General Aptitude Test Battery (GATB), list occupations for which Specific Aptitude Tests (SATBs) have been developed, and suggest uses of the guide for cataloging and filing occupational information materials. Many youths and other jobseekers are ill-prepared for effective job search because of a lack of knowledge about kinds of jobs to look for. They have difficulty in relating their interests, skills, and potentials to appropriate occupations. A major reason has been the lack of readily understandable and usable information about fields of work with which they can match their own interests and abilities.

Vocational counselors have similarly felt the need for such information on occupational fields and occupational requirements through which they can aid counselees explore appropriate kinds of work.

This Guide for Occupational Exploration has been designed by the U.S. Employment Service to help meet this need. The Guide is intended for use both by vocational counselors and by individuals themselves to assist with career and occupational exploration.

The Guide groups the thousands of occupations in the world of work by interests and by ability and traits required for successful performance. Descriptive information is provided for each work group to assist the individual in reviewing, understanding, and evaluating his or her own interests and potentials and relating them to pertinent fields of work.

Thus, the Guide enables individuals to identify and explore those areas of work in which they have strong interest. Within these areas, individuals can then identify those work groups whose job requirements are most closely related to the individuals' skills and potentials.

For the counselor, the Guide joins the General Aptitude Test Battery, a forthcoming new measure of interests—the USES Interest Inventory—and a newly revised Interest Checklist in forming a coordinated assessment-occupational exploration system to aid in carrying out effective counseling.

We hope that the Guide will make a significant contribution toward meeting the needs of individuals in finding themselves vocationally.

Acknowledgments

The Guide for Occupational Exploration was produced by the U.S. Employment Service in the Office of Technical Support, Harold Kuptzin, Director. Planning and direction were provided by Adaline Padgett of the Division of Occupational Analysis and Robert Droege of the Division of Testing, assisted by Earl Sizemore of the Division of Occupational Analysis.

Special recognition is due the following for their contributions to this endeavor: Anthony Fantaci, Chief, Division of Testing (formerly Chief, Division of Counseling and Testing), who gave leadership and guidance throughout the project and also assisted in developing techniques for its use; and Abraham Stahler, Consultant on Employment Counseling (formerly National Supervisor of Employment Counseling, USES), who provided leadership, advice, and guidance, directed the coordination among the various divisions involved, was responsible for the development of material describing the use of the Guide in vocational counseling, and assisted in editing the contents of the publication.

Earl T. Klein, Director of the Office of Program Services of the U.S. Employment Service, provided valuable support, coordination with counseling specialists, and constructive suggestions that contributed greatly to the completion of the Guide.

Oscar Gjernes, Chief, Employment Counseling and Special Applicant Services Unit, assisted in the planning and final review of the publication.

Participating in the development of the work groups and descriptive materials were the following: Evora McGlone, Division of Occupational Analysis; John Doyle and Howard McNeely, California Occupational Analysis Field Center; Dennis Doyle and John Johnson, Florida Occupational Analysis Field Center; Bessie Kuhn, Missouri Occupational Analysis Field Center; Alvin Sachs and David Knapp, New York Occupational Analysis Field Center; Michael Swaim, North Carolina Occupational Analysis Field Center; Kenneth Kiel and Pat Gage, Texas Occupational Analysis Field Center; Frank Jacobsen, Fred Johnsen, and Phil Leigh, Utah Occupational Analysis Field Center; and Barbara Taylor, Washington Occupational Analysis Field Center.

Tod Strohmenger, educational development specialist, Appalachia Educational Laboratory, assisted in review of the work groups and in developing the subgroups.

Acknowledgment is also made to Robert Horstman, computer specialist, Office of Administration and Management, Employment and Training Administration, for specialized computer services related to the development of the publication.

Mary Neal Bobbitt, supervisor of the clerical activities of the North Carolina Occupational Analysis Field Center, and her staff processed the group descriptions and job listings for computerization.

Lenora West, Yvonne Young, and Barbara Brent of the Division of Occupational Analysis provided support services.

Grateful acknowledgment is made to the following persons who participated in preliminary planning for the development of this publication: Mrs. Lillian Avery, Manager, California Test Research Field Center; Dr. Clement Berwitz, Chief, Occupational Analysis and Industry Services, New York State Department of Labor; Dr. William Cunningham, Associate Director, Center for Occupational Education, North Carolina State University; Mr. Paul Kerr, Supervisor, Technical Projects, Oregon State Employment Division; Mr. Harry Nussberger, Chief, Computer Manpower Programs, Wisconsin Division of Employment Security; Mr. Paul Reibel, Chief, Counseling, Ohio Bureau of Employment Services; Dr. Margaret Seitz, State Supervisor of Counseling and Special Services, Delaware Department of Labor; Mr. Barnaby B. Tilley, Counseling Supervisor, Louisiana Department of Employment Security; Mr. David Winefordner, Director, Career Decision-Making Program, Appalachia Educational Laboratory.

I. Introduction

Purpose of the Guide

One of the first objectives of the U.S. Federal-State Employment Service System is to help people see themselves realistically in regard to their ability to meet job requirements. The Guide for Occupational Exploration is designed for that purpose. By providing information about the interests, aptitudes, adaptabilities, and other requisites of occupational groups, the Guide makes possible a comparison of these requirements with what the individual knows about himself or herself. It is also a tool for counselors assisting individuals in self-assessment and occupational choice.

The language of the text is simple and nontechnical, intended for any reader's use, with or without counseling help: the youth who is planning a career; the person who must, or wishes to, change jobs; the partially qualified or unqualified jobseeker; and the counselor or vocational adviser who assists others with career exploration and planning and occupational choices or changes.

Organization

The data in this publication are organized into 12 interest areas, 66 work groups, and 348 subgroups.

INTEREST AREAS

The interest areas correspond to the interest factors which were identified from the research and development activities in interest measurement conducted by the Division of Testing in the U.S. Employment Service. The interest factors represent the broad interest requirements of occupations as well as the vocational interests of individuals. Both the factors and the areas are identified by a two-digit code, for example:

01-An interest in creative expression of feelings or ideas.

WORK GROUPS

Within each interest area are work groups—jobs suitable for exploration by those who have the particular interest. Each work group contains descriptive information and a listing of jobs. Within each group, the jobs are of the same general type of work and require the same adaptabilities and capabilities of the worker. Each group has its unique four-digit code and title, for example:

01.01 Literary Arts

The number of groups in each area varies from 2 in Area 12 to 12 in Area 5.

SUBGROUPS

Within each work group, jobs are subgrouped to make it easier for the reader to distinguish among jobs. Each subgroup has its six-digit unique code and title, for example:

01.01.02 Creative Writing

Because of the number of jobs within some of the subgroups, a further clustering of these jobs by industry is made, for example, aircraft manufacturing, iron and steel, motion picture. Within the same industry designation occupations are listed in alphabetical order and also within each subgroup. If an occupation has more than one industry designation, it is listed under that which occurs first alphabetically; for example, a job having the industry designations of motion picture, radio, and tv broadcasting would be listed under "motion picture."

The following illustrates the components of the structure:

01	Artistic	(Interest area)
01.01	Literary Arts	(Work group)
01.01.02	Creative Writing	(Subgroup)
	Screen Writer (motion pic, radio & tv broad.) 131.087-018
	Crossword-Puzzle Maker (print. & pub.) 139.087-010
	Editorial Writer (print. & pub.) 131.067-022
	Biographer (profess. & kin.) 052.067-010
	Copy Writer (profess. & kin.) 131.067-014
	Humorist (profess. & kin.) 131.067-026
	Lyricist (profess. & kin.) 131.067-034
	Poet (profess. & kin.) 131.067-042
	Writer, Prose, Fiction and Nonfiction (profess. & kin.) 131.067-946
	Continuity Writer (radio & tv broad.) 131.087-010

Descriptive information for each group gives the kinds of job activities perfomed, the requirements made on the worker, clues for relating individuals to the type of work, preparation for entry into jobs, and other pertinent items.

To meet the needs of all the users of this publication, four appendixes are added.

Appendix A: Background and technical development of the Interest Factors and the Guide. Describes the concepts and procedures for the development of the interest factors, and the methodology for their use in determining interest areas in this publication. Includes the techniques and procedures used in developing the work groups and subgroups.

Appendix B. USES Interest and Aptitude Tests (measurement tests oriented to utilization of the Guide). Provides (1) a brief description of the USES Interest Inventory and General Aptitude Test Battery (GATB) (measures of an individual's occupational interests and aptitudes oriented to the Guide and its use); and (2) a listing of occupations for which specific Aptitude Test Batteries (SATB's) have been developed to aid counselors who have access to the GATB.

Appendix C: Use of the Guide in organizing career and occupational information resources. Contains techniques and procedures for cataloging and filing occupational information materials according to the structure in the Guide.

Appendix D: Alphabetic Arrangement of Occupations. Lists all the occupations in the Guide. Bridges the occupations in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT) and the subgroups in the Guide. Includes all occupations in the DOT, fourth edition, excepting those specifically related to the military. Occupational titles are the same as those in the Dictionary, followed by the industry designation(s), the Dictionary code, and the six-digit code from this publication. Base titles are in capital letters; undefined related titles, in initial capital letters; and alternate titles, in lower case letters.

II. Use of the Guide in Career Exploration

An essential ingredient of vocational counseling is occupational and labor market information. Although the counseling process involves far more than providing such information, any instrument that organizes the world of work and provides information about occupational duties and requirements is valuable both to the counselor and to the counselee. Because vocational counseling services are not available to large numbers of potential counselees, the Guide is intended to help such persons make more informed vocational decisions than they might otherwise.

In this section of the Guide, both the individual who must make occupational choices without benefit of vocational counseling and the vocational counselor who assists counselees are instructed in how to use the Guide.

Use by Individuals Without Counselor Assistance

If you need help in deciding what kind of work you should choose, you can use the Guide to help you plan your career or get ready to find a job: not just any job, but one you can do or learn to do and which will be satisfying to you.

Different people like, and are good at, different things. To find the job that is right for you, you need two kinds of information:

1. You need information about yourself. You need to know the kind of work you would like to do and whether you are able to do such work. If you can't do it now, can you learn to do it and is a training program available?
2. You need information about occupations that sound interesting to you. What does the worker do on such jobs? What knowledge and skills must the worker have? What training is required?

This Guide tells you about occupations that relate to your interests and abilities. When you have used it properly, you will be better prepared to plan your career or seek employment, whether you do so through your public employment service office, an employment agency, a school placement program, answers to want ads, or applications directly to employers. Taking the following steps, you will learn about many jobs, including some you never knew existed. You should then be able to decide what type of work you can do and will find satisfaction in doing.

STEP 1. THINK ABOUT YOUR INTERESTS

What kind of work would you most like to do? Did you know that all jobs in the world of work have been organized into groups according to the interests of the workers?

Some workers like to help others. Some would rather do mechanical work with their hands or tools. Others prefer artistic work, or writing, or selling, or clerical work. These are just a few examples. The Guide for Occupational Exploration has taken all jobs in the United States and organized them into 12 areas on the basis of worker interest. They are called Interest Areas. Each of these 12 interest areas has been given a name, a code number, and a brief description. You will find these on page 9 of the Guide.

In order to learn more about the relation of your interests to occupations, turn to page 8 of the Guide and read the titles and descriptions of each interest area. Select one or more areas you think you would like to explore.

STEP 2. SELECT ONE OR MORE WORK GROUPS TO EXPLORE

In order to know what work groups to explore, you need to decide whether you would find satisfaction in work activities such as those required by occupations in the group. To do this, turn to the Summary Listing of Interest Areas, Work Groups, and Subgroups on pages 9 – 12 in the Guide. Look up the page numbers for each interest area you selected in Step 1. Turn to that page and read the description of the area. Then read the titles of each work group within the area. Think about what you like to do and what you think you can do. The following information will help you select the work groups that interest you.

Many of the jobs listed in the interest areas you have selected may require knowledge and skills that you do not have or would have difficulty acquiring. There should be occupations in some of these areas, however, that fit your interests and that you can do or learn to do. The jobs in each Interest Area have been divided into groups of jobs having similar worker requirements. These are called work groups.

Some work groups are made up of jobs requiring little specialized training or experience. Jobs in these groups are open to nearly anyone who is willing to work. Other groups include jobs requiring special courses in school or special training or education after high school. For example, some jobs require knowledge of subjects such as physics or chemistry. Others require accuracy and speed in working difficult math problems. You must think about what courses you have taken in school, how well you did in those subjects, and whether or not you might like a job that uses such knowledge and skill. You also have to think about whether you might be able to get the necessary additional training.

The groups that require the most education, training, and experience are usually listed first among the work groups in most interest areas. For example, in Area 05, Mechanical, the first work group is 05.01, Engineering. Most jobs in this group require 4 or more years of college.

The last work group in this area is 05.12, Elemental Work, Mechanical. In this group, many jobs are open to workers who have little formal education. As you make your selection of work groups to explore, you need to think about the difficulty of the work involved in each group, and about the training and experience that are required.

When you have made your selection of work groups from the first interest area, follow this same process for any other areas you selected in Step 1.

STEP 3. EXPLORE THE WORK GROUPS YOU SELECTED

To explore a work group, look up its description in the Guide for Occupational Exploration and read it very carefully. As you read about a group, you may discover that it is not what you thought it would be and that you are not interested in it. Or you may find that the training requirements are more difficult than you want. If you find for any reason that you no longer want to consider the group, stop exploring it, and go on to the next group you wish to consider.

STEP 4. EXPLORE SUBGROUPS AND SPECIFIC OCCUPATIONS

Each work group in the Guide contains occupations that have been organized into subgroups.

Each subgroup is identified by a six-digit code and a title, and contains a list of all the occupations assigned to it.

After you have studied a work group description and decided that you are interested in considering it further, you should examine its subgroups to see if one or more of them appears to suit your interests and qualifications better than the others. If you need further information to help you decide, you should select one or more of the occupations in the subgroups and look them up in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles. You can do this by using the nine-digit DOT code, which is shown in the subgroups immediately following the title of each occupation.

Job definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT) are listed in numerical order by DOT code. For example, to look up Editor, Film, you would look in the DOT under code 962.264–010, which is on page 930.

When you have completed your exploration of all groups that interest you and have identified subgroups, and possibly occupations of particular interest, you are in a position to organize the information you have collected. You can then make some decisions and plan your next steps.

STEP 5. GET IT ALL TOGETHER

Compare your present qualifications with those needed for the groups you are considering. You may have the training and experience necessary for immediate employment. On the other hand, you may have to make plans that include additional training or work experience at a lower level to help qualify you for the work of your choice.

At any rate, list those occupations or subgroups of occupations you are now interested in and think you can learn to do. Then plan to get training or a job.

If you still don't know what you should do, you can probably be helped by a vocational counselor or by a course or program designed for people who want assistance in vocational planning. If you are a student, you should arrange to meet with your school counselor, who can help you personally or tell you about any special programs available. If you are already in contact with a specialized agency such as the Bureau of Vocational Rehabilitation, a halfway house, or a CETA program, the counselor or caseworker in that program should be able to help you or refer you to someone who can.

If you are completely on your own, you should try to locate a private or public organization that offers vocational guidance services. Your library can probably help you identify such organizations. One such agency, which should be able to give you both employment counseling and job placement service, is the local office of the State employment service.

Use by Vocational Counselors

The counselor who assists individuals to choose a suitable occupational or vocational goal may function in any of a variety of settings—the school, the college, the public employment service, the private employment service, the vocational rehabilitation agency, or the community or private vocational guidance center.

In virtually every setting in which such counselors operate, they wish to help the individual evaluate his or her occupational interests, skills, and potentials, relate them to occupational requirements and opportunities, and arrive at a suitable occupational goal and a plan for achieving it.

To assist the counselee in this analysis, the counselor uses various tools and sources of information. The counselor helps the applicant or client to analyze his or her work experience (regular, casual, part-time, summer, military), education and training, voluntary and leisure-time activities, and other relevant experiences that may provide evidence of occupational preferences, skills, and potentialities. The counselor may administer or arrange for the administration of interest inventories or check lists, aptitude tests such as the USES General Aptitude Test Battery, and other tests and inventories.

Employment or vocational counseling, however, cannot be effective if it is limited to information about the counselee. Information is necessary about the world of work, to which the knowledge acquired about the individual can be related in arriving at a suitable occupational choice.

For some time now, the counselor has had available sources of occupational information, published by the Department of Labor, such as the Occupational Outlook Handbook, the Occupational Outlook Quarterly, the Job Guide for Young Workers, Occupations in Demand at Job Service Offices, and the Dictionary of Occupational Titles, as well as State occupational guides and labor market area reports prepared by State employment security agencies. These and similar publications provided useful information about labor market trends and opportunities and descriptions of occupations. However, a practical grouping of jobs in terms of occupational interest and work requirements was lacking.

The Guide for Occupational Exploration fills this longfelt need of vocational counselors. The thousands of occupations in the world of work are grouped by interests and by traits required for successful performance. The Guide provides a convenient crossover from information about the counselee to potentially suitable fields of work.

ROLE OF GUIDE IN COUNSELING AND GUIDANCE

The Guide for Occupational Exploration provides a clustering of occupations into fields of work within each major interest area—broad fields (through four-digit groups) and narrower fields (through six-digit subgroups)—which the counselor and counselee can explore and to which they can relate occupationally significant information about the counselee. Rather than attempting to explore the entire world of work, the counselor and counselee can identify those areas of work in which the counselee has the strongest interest and, within the interest areas, those work groups that are most closely related to the interests, skills, aptitudes, education and training, and physical abilities of the counselee.

The Guide may be used particularly (1) to give the counselee an overview of the world of work and thus widen his or her understanding of occupations and (2) to help the counselee determine his or her occupational goal by offering a choice of fields of work and occupations that best reflect the interests, abilities, and potentials of the counselee.

TIE-IN WITH THE GENERAL APTITUDE TEST BATTERY (GATB)

The Guide joins the General Aptitude Test Battery (GATB) and the forthcoming Interest Inventory and revised Interest Check List to form a coordinated assessment-occupational exploration system developed by the USES for use in the counseling process. To facilitate use of GATB results with the Guide, a new set of Occupational Aptitude Patterns (OAP's) has been developed based on work groups in the Guide. (The new OAP's are scheduled for publication soon.)

USE OF THE GUIDE IN THE COUNSELING PROCESS

The Guide may be used at any point in the counseling process: (1) to enable the counselee to obtain a better understanding of the variety of interest areas and fields of work that constitute the world of work and (2) to assist the counselee to explore areas of interest, fields of work, and specific occupations in order to identify occupational groups and specific jobs that are most in line with the counselee's interests, abilities, and potentials.

Widening Understanding of World of Work

If the counselee's experience and understanding of the world of work is limited, it will be desirable for him or her, during the early stages of the counseling process, to obtain an overview of the various interest areas and work groups covered in the Guide. The Guide lists 12 Interest Areas, 66 Work Groups, and 348 subgroups.

The counselor may review these sections with the counselee or suggest that the counselee review them independently, to become generally familiar with the various interest areas and with the work groups covered in each area, especially in those areas in which he or she has a particular interest. If the counselee wishes to know more about an interest area or work group, there are brief descriptions at the beginning of the interest area and of the work group starting on page 13 in the Guide.

This overview should be helpful not only in giving the counselee an overall "feel" of the world of work but also in providing a background against which to relate elements in his or her work experience, education and training, leisure time activities, and other experiences that point to possible suitable fields of work and occupations in the analysis that takes place during the course of the counseling process.

Determining Occupational Goal

During the counseling process, the counselor assists the counselee to choose an occupational field that best represents the counselee's interests, skills, and potential abilities, and that offers opportunity for employment. Analysis of occupationally related experiences, application of aptitude and interest tests, and relation of the resulting information to occupational groupings in the Guide for Occupational Exploration are major steps in this process.

Analysis of Occupationally Related Experiences. The counselor assists the counselee to analyze occupationally related experiences that may indicate his or her true occupational interests, aptitudes, acquired skills, personal traits, and any environmental and financial factors that may have vocational significance. Thus, the counselor explores with the counselee past work history, school courses, leisure-time activities, hobbies, voluntary activities, and other experiences for indications of kinds of work the counselee particularly liked and seemed to do well in and those he or she disliked or did poorly in. Out of this analysis will emerge indications of types of work to consider seriously or to avoid.

The overview of the world of work, seen through the Guide as suggested above, when received early in the counseling process, will provide an occupational information base that will be useful in analyzing past experiences for occupationally significant elements.

Aptitude and Interest Testing

In addition to obtaining information about the counselee's background during the counseling interview, the counselor will often administer, or arrange for administration of, the USES Interest Inventory or Interest Check List and/or the General Aptitude Test Battery (GATB) or other tests for further indications of interests and potential ability.

The USES Interest Inventory (to be published in 1979) will provide formal measures of occupational interests that can be related directly to the Interest Areas in the Guide. Meanwhile, a newly revised Interest Check List will give helpful information on occupational interests of the counselee and a tie-in with the Guide because the results will relate directly to the work groups in the Guide.

The occupational preferences that derive from the interview(s) and the use of the interest tools will serve as entries to the 12 Interest Areas in the Guide for Occupational Exploration. The GATB results can also serve as entries to the Guide because the new OAP structure will relate directly to occupational groups in the Guide.

Use of Guide in Determining Occupational Goal

After occupationally significant information is obtained about the counselee through the counseling interview(s) and the use of the various tools, the counselor and the counselee can use the Guide to explore fields of work and to help the counselee select a suitable occupational goal.

Steps suggested in this process are the following:

STEP 1. HELP THE COUNSELEE IDENTIFY AREAS TO BE CONSIDERED

The information obtained about the counselee will reveal broad areas of particular interest to him or her. A list of these Interest Areas may be made to insure exploration of all pertinent areas. The counselee should be encouraged to read the description of the selected areas to verify further the relevance of his or her interests. A review may also be made of the descriptions of other interest areas for the possible identification of further areas to be explored.

STEP 2. HELP THE COUNSELEE SELECT AND EXPLORE WORK GROUPS

When interest areas to explore further are chosen, the client may review the description of all work groups (indicated by four-digit code) within these interest areas to help decide which work groups to explore. Sometimes a glance at the work group title may be enough to identify a type of activity the client does not wish to investigate further. The counselee may then return to each group selected for further exploration. Alternatively, as the counselee reads a group title and description and expresses interest in the work group, he or she may explore it immediately, before moving on to the next work group.

In exploring the work group, the counselor should help the counselee determine the suitability of the group from the standpoint of his or her true interests, aptitudes, skills and traits required, further preparation needed, and other relevant considerations.

To explore each selected work group, it is suggested that the counselee review each of the five items under the work group description. During the course of discussion of each item, the counselor should help the counselee try to relate occupationally significant information known about the counselee to the information in the item.

The first item, "What kind of work would you do?" provides examples of types of work activities included in the group, for example, "Write dialogue for television program" and "Set up and operate a lathe." These examples, along with the description of the work group, will help the counselee to get a "feel" of the kind of work involved and to determine then if it is a type of activity in line with his or her interests, skills, and potentials. These activities do not apply to a single occupation but are illustrative of the kind of work performed in various jobs in this group.

The second item, "What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?" names characteristics required of the worker to perform successfully in occupations in this group. For example, it points up such actual or potential abilities needed as "influencing people's opinions, attitudes, and judgments" and "willingness and ability to work within precise limits or standards of accuracy." This information should help the counselee determine whether these are the kinds of work situations and requirements that would appeal to him or her.

The third item, "How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this type of work?" mentions work experience, extracurricular activities, hobbies, and other activities and experiences, as well as skills, potentials, and interests relevant to occupations in this work group. This item provides clues concerning the counselee's possible ability to do, or learn to do, and want to do this kind of work.

Questions such as "Have you written an original story?", "Can you create original characters or situtations that interest and entertain others?", and "Have you taken an industrial arts or machine shop course?", "Do you like to set up machines according to written standards?" help the counselee think through whether he or she has the interest and ability to do, or learn to do, types of work included in this group. The counselor should help the counselee relate these kinds of personal experiences and interests to the work group being explored.

The fourth item, "How can you prepare for and enter this type of work?" describes the kind of training, work, and other experience usually required by or acceptable to employers and the means of entry into the field. The counselee, if interested in this work group, will consider at this point whether he or she has the kind of preparation usually needed or is willing to take further training that may be required.

The fifth item, "What else should you consider about these jobs?" provides a number of other considerations that the counselee will want to weigh in making up his or her mind about the satisfactions and suitability of this kind of work. For example, the counselee is advised "Most new workers in writing occupations start with routine assignments such as writing headlines." "Only in establishments where few writers are employed is the newcomer given creative writing assignments," and "Some workers are paid hourly wages. Other workers are paid according to the number of pieces they produce."

A simple record should be kept of all work groups reviewed and those identified for further exploration.

The counselor or counselee might prefer either to complete Step 3 for each work group being explored before moving on to the next work group, or to complete Step 2 for all work groups being considered, before exploring any of them further.

STEP 3. HELP THE COUNSELEE TO EXPLORE SUBGROUPS AND SPECIFIC OCCUPATIONS

After exploring the work group, the counselee will usually find either that he or she is not seriously interested in the type of work covered by the group or will want to explore it still further. Where the counselee is still interested in the work group, the counselor should help him or her to examine and interpret subgroup titles and to choose one or more for further investigation.

The specific occupations within each subgroup are arranged in clusters by the industry in which the jobs occur. Therefore, in examining subgroups and occupations, a factor to consider is whether the industry is located in the area in which the counselee lives or to which he or she is willing to go.

The counselee should be encouraged to identify subgroup titles that seem interesting and potentially suitable, based on all the information that the counselee now has about himself or herself. Then specific occupations that may tentatively appeal to the counselee could be identified.

The counselee should be helped to look up in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles the definitions of occupations that seem of particular interest. The subgroups and the specific occupations within them should be considered from the standpoint of opportunities available for placement or training, of the counselee's interests and qualifications, and of the occupational requirements.

STEP 4. HELP THE COUNSELEE TO SELECT HIS OR HER VOCATIONAL GOAL

A listing should be made of subgroups and specific occupations that appear to be particularly interesting and suitable for the counselee. The pros and cons of each should be weighed and the most desirable and suitable work groups, subgroups, or occupations selected by the counselee as his or her vocational goal. The goal may be expressed in terms of any of these three categories but most likely of the work groups, or subgroups, depending upon the individual's qualifications.

STEP 5. HELP THE COUNSELEE TO DEVELOP A PLAN FOR ATTAINING THE GOAL

As usual, the counselor will assist the counselee to develop a realistic vocational plan for reaching the goal; the plan should reflect actions to be taken by the local office and the counselee, either to enter a training program or to obtain suitable employment.

STEP 6. ASSIGN APPROPRIATE OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATIONS

The counselor, particularly in the employment service setting, should assign one or more occupational classifications to reflect the occupational goal(s) arrived at by the counselee and to facilitate his or her selection for referral to suitable employment.

Two or more counseling interviews are usually required to help the counselee make a suitable occupational choice and to plan to implement that choice. The counselor may wish to suggest that, during one of the interviews or between interviews, the counselee review a copy of the Guide for Occupational Exploration. The section, "Use by Individuals Without Counselor Assistance," will provide helpful suggestions for reviewing the Guide even though the counselee is actually receiving assistance from the counselor.

The Guide thus serves as a useful reference tool in career exploration for the individual as well as an important tool for the counselor in helping develop a sound and realistic vocational goal for the counselee.

III. Definitions of Interest Factors*

1. ARTISTIC:
   Interest in creative expression of feelings or ideas.

2. SCIENTIFIC:
   Interest in discovering, collecting, and analyzing information about the natural world and in applying scientific research findings to problems in medicine, life sciences, and natural sciences.

3. PLANTS AND ANIMALS:
   Interest in activities involving plants and animals, usually in an outdoor setting.

4. PROTECTIVE:
   Interest in the use of authority to protect people and property.

5. MECHANICAL:
   Interest in applying mechanical principles to practical situations, using machines, handtools, or techniques.

6. INDUSTRIAL:
   Interest in repetitive, concrete, organized activities in a factory setting.

7. BUSINESS DETAIL:
   Interest in organized, clearly defined activities requiring accuracy and attention to detail, primarily in an office setting.

8. SELLING:
   Interest in bringing others to a point of view through personal persuasion, using sales and promotion techniques.

9. ACCOMMODATING:
   Interest in catering to the wishes of others, usually on a one-to-one basis.

10. HUMANITARIAN:
    Interest in helping others with their mental, spiritual, social, physical, or vocational needs.

11. LEADING-INFLUENCING:
    Interest in leading and influencing others through activities involving high-level verbal or numerical abilities.

12. PHYSICAL PERFORMING:
    Interest in physical activities performed before an audience.

01.01 Literary Arts

Workers in this group write, edit, or direct the publication of prose or poetry. They find employment on newspapers or magazines, in radio and television studios, and in the theatre and motion picture industries. Some writers are self-employed and sell stories, plays, and other forms of literary composition to publishers.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —write plays or scripts for movies.
- —write short stories, poems, or novels.
- —write dialog for television programs.
- —select writers and subject matter for television productions.
- —edit the work of creative writers.
- —write reviews of literature, musical performances, and other artistic work.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —present personal views or interpretations relating to such subjects as politics, social conditions, religion, or plays or other writings.
- —influence the opinion of people through words.
- —deal with various kinds of people.
- —make decisions based on personal judgment.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you written a book review for a class? Do you enjoy others reading your interpretations?
- —Have you written an original story? Can you create original characters or situations that interest and entertain others?
- —Have you developed publicity posters for a garage sale, fund drive, or community activity? Can you select words that spark people's curiosity and interest?
- —Have you written poems for an English class or for poetry contests? Do you enjoy expressing personal thoughts and feelings in this type of writing?
- —Have you written for or edited a school newspaper, union bulletin, or company newsletter? Can you edit and improve the writing of others?
- —Have you told ghost stories around a campfire or other setting? Were they interesting and entertaining to others?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Experience in writing is usually required for employment. Writing for weekly or monthly newspapers or magazines can be helpful in getting jobs with large newspapers or advertising agencies. Employers often require samples of published writing. Editing jobs usually require several years experience as a writer.

Courses in English grammar and composition, as well as literature, are basic high school subjects. Community colleges and universities offer programs that prepare people for this kind of work. Courses in journalism, English, and creative writing provide necessary skills. Some occupations require proficiency in one or more foreign languages; while others require a knowledge of political science, art, drama, or other subjects. For example, a person wishing to become a critic must have in-depth knowledge of the subject to be criticized, art, music, or the like. This knowledge can be acquired through courses at colleges or universities; specialized schools, such as art institutes, or performing arts little theaters or playhouses.

Self-employed or freelance writers sometimes use literary agents to help them find publishers. These agents may help the writer prepare material for publication. Publishers occasionally hire experienced free-lance writers to write about a particular subject.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Most new workers in writing occupations start with routine assignments such as writing headlines. Only in establishments where few writers are employed is the newcomer given creative writing assignments.

Some jobs are available for part-time workers. Freelance writers sometimes prepare advertising copy or serve as local correspondents for daily newspapers.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

01.02 Visual Arts

Workers in this group create original works of art or do commercial art work, using such techniques as drawing, painting, photographing, and sculpturing to express or interpret ideas or to illustrate various written materials. Some visual artists design products, settings, or graphics (such as advertisements or book covers), and oversee the work of other artists or craftsmen who produce or install them. Others teach art, or appraise or restore paintings and other fine art objects. Advertising agencies, printing and publishing firms, television and motion picture studios, museums and restoration laboratories employ visual artists. They also work for manufacturers and in retail and wholesale trade. Many are self-employed, operating their own commercial art studios or doing free-lance work.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —paint or sketch portraits, landscapes, and other subjects in oils, watercolors, or charcoals.

—design and supervise the construction of scenery for plays.

—plan the arrangement of advertising materials for a department store.

—examine oil paintings to determine the need for restoration, and use scientific and artistic techniques to restore them to their original appearance.

—draw accurate and precise pictures of diseased body organs to illustrate articles in medical journals.

—design and cut original pattern for women's clothing.

—sculpture a statue or other work of art.

—photograph subjects to prepare a photo story.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—understand and apply artistic principles and techniques.

—visualize how the final product will look from rough sketches or work drawings.

—use paint brushes, pens, charcoal, or sculpturing tools skillfully, to produce accurate plans for displays or scenery, illustrations for written materials, or original works of art.

—choose the most appropriate equipment to express an idea or create a particular effect.

—tell whether a work of art is the 'real thing' or a fake by examining it and using various chemical tests, knowledge of art history, and familiarity with the characteristics of the style of various artists.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you taken courses in drawing or sketching? Were any of your works selected for display or entry in competition?

—Have you helped paint scenery for amateur plays? Can you select the proper color combinations to achieve a desired effect?

—Have you taken photographs of family, friends, or activities? Do you think they were of good quality and pleasing to the eye?

—Have you visited art galleries and shows? Do you try to judge the quality of paintings or sculptures?

—Have you worked with modeling clay? Do you enjoy creating original designs in clay?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years up to and over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. A common method of preparation is to obtain a four-year degree with a major in fine arts or commercial art. Some artists earn a two- or three-year certificate at an art institute. Programs include the study of art history and critique as well as instruction in techniques.

Small advertising agencies, department stores, and photography studios sometimes hire workers with vocational school or junior college background. These workers are assigned tasks according to their ability. They are usually provided on-the-job training to improve their skills.

Industrial designing jobs require artistic and engineering skills to make scale drawings and to illustrate technical information. Jobs in restoring and appraising art objects usually require a background in art history, chemistry, and similar subjects.

Free-lance visual artists usually have experience as illustrators, designers, art restorers, or photographers. These workers must be well-known for their work and have contact with potential buyers. Samples of their work are used to show their skills to customers.

Administrative and supervisory jobs in the visual arts require extensive experience in the field.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Most visual artists depend upon some sort of commercial art or design work for financial security. Few can afford to be artists with no regular income.

People who can use a variety of techniques and art media have more opportunities for employment than those who specialize in one area.

01.03 Performing Arts: Drama

Workers in this group produce, direct, and perform in dramatic productions and similar forms of entertainment. They also teach acting, choose performers for particular roles, and perform other 'behind-the-scenes' work to make productions run smoothly. They are employed by motion picture, television, and radio studios, and by stock companies, theaters and other places where plays or floor shows are presented. Schools and colleges hire performing artists both to teach drama and to produce and direct student productions. Full time employment in this field is found at educational institutions, at studios which have staff announcers, disc jockeys, and regularly scheduled 'talk shows' or dramatic presentations. However, most performing artists are not permanently employed, and must audition for roles in both short-term and long-run productions.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —do a pantomime, using only body movements and facial expressions.
- —instruct students in the basic techniques of acting.
- —direct actors and other workers involved in a play or motion picture.
- —select, announce, and play popular records at a radio station.
- —perform a comic monolog on a television variety show or in a night club.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —perform before an audience with poise and self-confidence.
- —interpret roles, and express ideas and emotions through body motions, facial expressions, and voice inflections.
- —understand the ideas that the author of a script is trying to get across, and demonstrate to others methods of moving or speaking to convey these ideas to an audience.
- —speak clearly and loudly.
- —memorize dialog and respond to cues promptly.

—maintain physical and mental energy through long hours of rehearsal and performance.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you performed in a play? Do you enjoy performing before an audience?
- —Have you spoken on radio or television? Are you able to control your voice and is it pleasing when electronically amplified?
- —Have you memorized a long passage? Can you recite from memory before an audience?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Because of the strong competition for jobs, workers in this group must have both training and experience. Initial training and experience are available in speech classes, debate programs, and school or community plays. Four-year degrees and advanced study in drama or communications provide additional training. Courses in speech, pantomime, directing, and acting are a part of these programs. Colleges also provide opportunities for experience in acting, announcing, and directing. Special acting schools offer professional training in the dramatic arts.

Experience in numerous productions is very important, including both amateur and paid jobs. Dinner theaters, summer theaters, repertory groups, and local radio and television stations provide valuable experiences.

Jobs in directing require extensive acting experience or experience in directing amateur productions. Dramatic coaching and college level teaching usually require advanced degrees in dramatics. Professional experience in acting, directing, or play production is also helpful. Teachers of high school courses in drama, speech, or communications must meet specific educational and licensing requirements.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Dramatic artists are often required to meet demanding work schedules. These schedules may require early or late hours for rehearsals and performances. Memorizing sessions require individual study. In addition, frequent travel may be necessary.

Work assignments sometimes depend upon an individual's voice or physical appearance. Distinctive features are assets which are in much demand.

01.04 Performing Arts: Music

Workers in this group sing or play instruments, teach, or direct vocal or instrumental music. They compose, arrange, or orchestrate musical compositions, and plan the presentation of concerts. They work for motion picture studios, television and radio networks or local stations, recording studios, night clubs, and other places where musical entertainment is provided regularly. They may be employed by orchestras, bands, or choral groups which give scheduled performances or are hired for special events. Composers, arrangers, and orchestrators work for music publishing companies and firms in the recording and entertainment fields. Schools and colleges hire musicians to teach and direct vocal and instrumental music. Many musicians are self-employed, and like all performing artists, must audition for parts in musical productions or for employment with an orchestra or other performing group.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- direct a choir, orchestra, or band.
- sing in a professional choir.
- play a musical instrument in a band.
- sing several solos in a concert.
- prepare the musical score for all instruments in an orchestra.
- compose an original musical number.
- select and arrange a program of music.
- give private voice or instrument lessons.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- spend long hours developing and perfecting your talent, and, even after becoming extremely skilled, continue to practice daily.
- perform before an audience with poise and self-assurance.
- recognize and follow music symbols and oral or written instructions for interpreting music properly.
- understand the qualities of various musical instruments and consider these in orchestrating or arranging compositions to create desired effects.
- apply standard musical theories and techniques to direct performances of vocal or instrumental groups.
- use your hands and fingers skillfully to play an instrument.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you sung in school choruses or church choirs? Does your voice blend well with others? Do you enjoy singing in public?
- Have you had lessons in singing or playing a musical instrument? Have you played in a school band or orchestra? Can you read music?
- Have you composed a song or music for an instrument? Did others enjoy it?
- Have you sung or played with a rock or country group?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Professional instrumental musicians usually receive initial training while in elementary school. They continue studying throughout most of their working life. Several hours of practice each day is a continuing requirement for the development and maintenance of the needed skills.

Professional vocal musicians usually start formal training in high school or whenever their voices mature. School music groups and programs provide good initial training. Daily individual or group practice is a continuing requirement for vocal musicians.

Although some persons with fine natural singing voices or self-developed skill in playing an instrument may find work--or even achieve great success--in popular rock, country, or jazz music, they are the rare exceptions. Study in college, at a music conservatory, or with private teachers is recommended for people who want to become professional musicians. Courses in music theory, composition, and conducting are required in addition to technical instruction. Arrangers, composers, and conductors need extensive training in these subjects.

Membership in a musical group is considered valuable experience and preparation for musicians. This experience is also helpful for people studying for solo performances.

Employment as a professional musician is usually dependent upon the skill and experience of the individual. Teachers in public schools and colleges are required to meet specific educational and licensing requirements.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Vocal musicians sometimes have a shorter working life than instrumentalists. Voice quality may change with age or the personal singing style may become outdated. Singers who can also dance or act may have more job opportunities.

Some instrumentalists are required to have the ability to play several different instruments.

01.05 Performing Arts: Dance

Workers in this group compose, perform, or teach dance routines or techniques. Performing dancers and composers (choreographers) work for motion picture and television studios, nightclubs and theaters, and other places where this kind of entertainment is regularly presented. Dance teachers are employed by schools and studios. Although some dancers work full-time as performers or teachers, most must audition for both chorus and solo work in theatrical productions of all kinds. Many dancers are self-employed as teachers who give private lessons to children and adults, specializing in ballroom or ballet instruction.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —perform a dance routine as a member of a chorus line.
- —create dance routines for a musical show.
- —perform a solo dance in a variety show.
- —teach people to dance.
- —direct a troupe of dancers.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —memorize and follow instructions for dance routines.
- —move with grace and rhythm, coordinating your body movements to music, and with the movements of other dancers.
- —keep in excellent physical condition by exercising and performing dance routines regularly.
- —perform before an audience with poise and self-confidence.
- —express emotions, such as joy, sorrow, or excitement, by the way you move your arms, legs, and body.
- —understand all of the basic dance steps and the way they relate to various kinds of music, to devise routines for musical comedy dance sequences.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you participated in ballroom or social dancing? Do you like to learn new dances? Do you learn dance steps rapidly?
- Have you taken lessons in ballet or tap dancing? Were you able to learn different dance routines?
- Have you done free style or interpretive dancing? Do you like this kind of expression? Can you move your body and limbs gracefully?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Initial training in dance is often provided in physical education or music classes in elementary and high schools. However, instruction in a dance studio is usually needed to develop the skills. This instruction often starts at the preschool age and continues after employment as a dancer. Daily practice is a continuing requirement to develop and maintain the physical condition and techniques needed.

Liberal arts colleges, dance academies, and theater arts schools offer two- to four-year programs in dancing techniques, interpretation, and the history of dance. Many dance schools cooperate with professional ballet and interpretive dance companies to provide experience as well as instruction.

Some people find jobs as ballroom dancing instructors or part-time entertainers after taking dancing instructions. They usually have a natural aptitude and an attractive appearance. Intensive preparation is needed to be hired as a ballet or interpretive dancer, as a chorus dancer in musical comedies, or in television or other media. Dancers must audition for jobs with permanent resident or touring companies. Becoming a choreographer requires extensive performing experience as well as a thorough knowledge of dance.

Private dancing teachers must be able to demonstrate the techniques of many different types of dancing. Teachers in public schools and colleges are required to meet specific educational and licensing requirements.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Strong feet, ankles, and legs are essential for professional dancers. Most people cannot make dancing a lifetime occupation because of the strenuous physical demands of dancing. Teaching is too strenuous for some dancers nearing retirement age. Few dancers, other than well-known performers, are hired for show work after the age of thirty.

Performing jobs may be found in most metropolitan areas as well as areas where there are musical shows, nightclubs or other settings.

01.06 Craft Arts

Workers in this group apply artistic techniques, fabricate, decorate or repair a variety of products, and reproduce photographs and graphic or printed materials. They use engraving and etching precision equipment, knives and chisels, paint brushes and power tools to work wood, stone, clay, metal, and gemstones, or embellish objects made from all of these materials. They are employed by manufacturing firms, printing and publishing companies, and motion picture and television studios. They also work for advertising agencies and other firms which provide specialized services, museums, and retail stores. Some craft artists are self-employed, selling items they have made, or providing their services on a free-lance basis to businesses and individuals.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —carve designs and lettering on wooden blocks or rollers for printing greeting cards.

—engrave designs and names on athletic trophies.
—paint designs and letters on posters with an airbrush.
—retouch photographs to highlight features of subjects.
—hand letter documents, such as diplomas and charters, using pen and ink.
—Use special tools and techniques to clean and prepare fossils for a museum display.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—apply artistic skills, such as painting, drawing, or modeling, in practical ways.
—select the tools, materials, and methods which are best for each purpose.
—picture the way the finished product should look from drawings prepared by a designer.
—use your eyes, hands, and fingers skillfully to guide knives, pens, brushes, and modeling tools precisely.
—take pride in turning out work that appears attractive and meets the standards set by a customer or your supervisor.
—look at an object and notice tiny flaws which should be removed or repaired.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work.

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you made your own jewelry? Do you enjoy working with your hands and making things?

—Have you decorated a cake for a birthday or other event? Did you create your own designs?
—Have you completed a paint-by-number picture? Do you have a steady hand?
—Have you used a wood-burning tool to etch a preprinted design? Do you like to use tools of this kind?
—Have you made or decorated clay pottery?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Courses in industrial art, drafting, art, or craft work may provide initial preparation. More specific training is needed for some jobs depending on the industry, process, or product involved.

Vocational high schools, technical schools, and junior colleges offer training in lettering, engraving, or etching. Trade unions and employers sometimes cooperate to offer apprenticeship training.

Training in the conservation and restoration of art objects and artifacts is given at a number of colleges, and lasts from six months to two years. This is usually followed by a year or two of on-the-job training as an intern or assistant, working under the direction of a skilled craftsman in a museum or conservation laboratory.

Some employers hire workers on the basis of manual skill, experience, and learning ability. Workers are given on-the-job training to develop the knowledge and skills they need. Many of these jobs are specialized crafts, which require two or more years of training and experience.

Hand decorating jobs do not require formal training. Art courses, drafting, or mechanical drawing classes at the high school or junior college level are helpful. Most employers provide six months to one year of on-the-job training to teach the proper techniques.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Opportunities for workers to express their own creativity vary among the jobs in this group. People who are interested in art, but prefer working under specific instructions rather than strictly on their own, will find many job possibilities here. Although these workers use art and craft tools and materials, and produce work that is artistic in nature, they do not have to spend as much time or money on training as they would to prepare for other jobs in the visual arts.

Workers with skill and experience sometimes open their own businesses. Some do free-lance or contract work.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

01.07 Elemental Arts

Workers in this group entertain or divert people by announcing features or performing acts at carnivals or amusement parks, or by conducting person-to-person consultations with people to predict their future or tell them other things about themselves. They work with traveling carnivals or circuses, or at permanently located amusement parks. Some are self-employed, conducting interviews in their homes or giving consultations by mail.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —introduce circus acts and signal the start and finish of each act.

—shout show attractions to the passing public.
—analyze handwriting to determine personal characteristics.
—guess weight of people at an amusement park or carnival.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—attract the attention of others by speaking, gesturing or shouting.
—be at ease when appearing before an audience.
—speak clearly, using easily understood terms, and offering your information with sincerity when dealing with clients on a person-to-person basis.
—learn and apply the specialized techniques needed for such feats as fire-eating, snake charming, or sword-swallowing.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you played Santa Claus? Have you worn a costume as a mascot? Did you enjoy doing this type of activity?
—Have you worked at a school or community fair or carnival? Were you able to get people to play the games or watch the shows?
—Have you performed card tricks for friends? Do you enjoy amusing others?
—Have you played games involving reading the minds of others? Do you feel you have psychic powers?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over six months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Many of these jobs require only brief training for workers to become familiar with the work setting and tasks. Greater training and practice in areas such as astrology, numerology, or graphology are necessary for some jobs. Other jobs, such as ring conductor in a circus, require related work experience. Some workers are hired if they fit a specific costume. Some people develop the necessary skills through practicing their hobbies such as snake handling, or telling fortunes.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many of these jobs are seasonal or temporary with few chances for promotion. Jobs with circuses and other amusement shows require frequent travel.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

01.08 Modeling

Workers in this group appear before a camera or live audience in non-speaking capacities. They stand in for actors and take part in crowd scenes in television or motion picture productions. They show clothing, hair styles, and other products, appear in fashion shows and other public or private product exhibitions, and pose for artists and photographers. They work for manufacturers, or wholesale, and retail establishments. Some are employed by motion picture and television studios, nightclubs, and other entertainment facilities. Modeling instructors work for public or private schools. Many of these workers are self-employed, or obtain job assignments through model agencies or unions which represent persons in the entertainment industry.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —model clothing for a designer or department store.
- —pose for a photographer or an artist.
- —stand in place for a movie star so cameras can be adjusted.
- —parade across a stage to display costumes as background for a chorus line.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —stand, sit, walk, or pose in front of an audience, photographer, or artist for long periods of time.
- —follow directions for movements and poses to express certain emotions or convey various visual impressions.
- —appear before an audience with poise and self-assurance.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you modeled for an artist or photographer? Can you hold a pose for a half-hour or longer?
- —Have you modeled clothes in a fashion show? Do you enjoy appearing before groups?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over six months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Training for many of these jobs is usually brief and given on the job. Modeling schools offer courses in graceful movement and personal grooming.

Workers are often hired because of their appearance or size. Workers may be under contract to a booking agency or may obtain work on their own.

Models may work only part-time until the quality of their work is recognized. Workers in this group often hold other jobs.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many of these jobs are short-term or seasonal and offer little opportunity for advancement. A few models may be in constant demand and earn large salaries.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

02

An interest in discovering, collecting, and analyzing information about the natural world and applying scientific research findings to problems in medicine, the life sciences, and the natural sciences.

You can satisfy this interest by working with the knowledge and processes of the sciences. You may enjoy researching and developing new knowledge in mathematics. Perhaps solving problems in the physical or life sciences would appeal to you. You may wish to study medicine and help humans or animals. You could work as a practitioner in the health field. You may want to work with scientific equipment and procedures. You could seek a job in research or testing laboratories.

02.01 Physical Sciences

Workers in this group are concerned mostly with non-living things, such as chemicals, rocks, metals, mathematics, movements of the earth and the stars, etc. They conduct scientific studies and perform other activities requiring a knowledge of math, physics, or chemistry. Some workers investigate, discover, and test new theories. Some look for ways to develop new or improved materials or processes for use in production and construction. Others do research in such fields as geology, astronomy, oceanography, and computer science. Workers base their conclusions on information that can be measured or proved. Industries, government agencies, or large universities employ most of these workers in their research facilities.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —study (aerial) photographs for indications of possible oil or gas deposits.
- —examine rock formations to develop theories about the earth and its history.
- —use information about wind, temperature, humidity, and land formations to predict weather.
- —help solve environmental problems such as pollution.
- —develop chemical formulas for making fine perfumes.
- —conduct experiments to develop new metals.
- —gather and interpret information about movements in the earth.
- —use advanced math to solve very complex problems.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

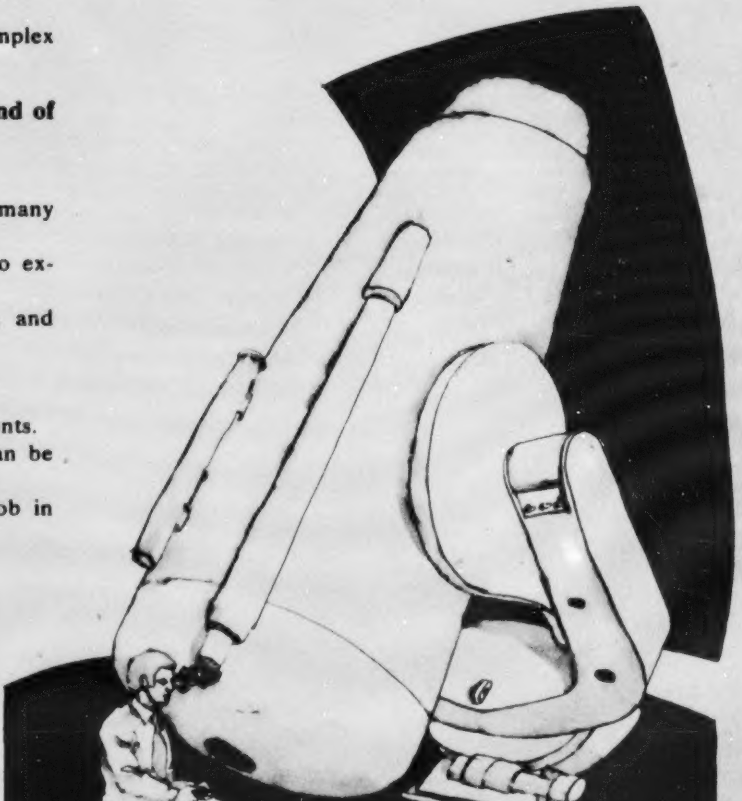
- —use logic or scientific thinking to deal with many different kinds of problems.
- —use non-verbal symbols (such as numbers) to express ideas or solve problems.
- —understand and express complex, technical, and scientific information.
- —recognize textures, colors, shapes, and sizes.
- —make decisions using your own judgments.
- —gather and interpret data about earth movements.
- —make decisions based on information that can be measured or verified.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken courses in earth science or space science?



- —Have you read articles or stories about scientific expeditions? Do you understand scientific terminology?
- —Have you collected rocks or minerals as a hobby? Can you recognize differences in ores or mineral deposits?
- —Have you watched television weather shows? Do you understand the terms and symbols used?
- —Have you owned a chemistry set or microscope? Do you enjoy testing new ideas with this type of equipment?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. A bachelor's degree with a major in mathematics or a specific physical science is the minimum requirement for entrance into this type of work. Graduate degrees are needed for most research work or college teaching. A master's degree may qualify an individual for work in laboratory teaching or applied research in a college, university, or industrial setting. Advanced studies or a Ph.D. are usually required for work in basic research. Important courses include algebra, geometry, advanced math, physics, and earth and space science. Chemistry and technical writing courses are helpful and in some cases required.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Physical scientists may be required to work irregular hours to meet research deadlines or to study phenomena. Frequent relocation or travel to remote areas may be required. Workers should keep informed of developments in their field by attending seminars, reading professional journals, and being active in professional organizations.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

02.02 Life Sciences

Workers in this group are concerned mostly with living things such as plants and animals. They conduct research and do experiments to expand man's knowledge of living things. Some may work on problems related to how the environment affects plant and animal life. Others may study causes of disease and ways to control disease. These workers are usually employed in the research facilities of hospitals, government agencies, industries, or universities.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —prepare slides and use microscopes to study cells and cell structure.
- —examine animals and specimens to study the effect of drugs on living tissue.
- —conduct experiments with growing bacteria to develop new information about diseases.
- —conduct research to develop improved ways to process food.
- —study the origin and classification of plants or animals.
- —conduct experiments by breeding animals or plants to study characteristics passed from parents to offspring.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —use logic and scientific methods to study living things.
- —understand and use instructions that use word numbers, diagrams, or chemical formulas.
- —learn and use knowledge about how living things function, how plants and animals are classified, and how to use laboratory and scientific equipment.
- —recognize differences in size, form, shape, color, and textures.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers easily and accurately.
- —do a lot of different things and change what you are doing frequently.
- —make decisions using your own judgment.
- —make decisions based on information that can be measured or verified.
- —do things which require you to be very careful and accurate.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you studied plants in a garden, forest, or laboratory setting? Can you recognize and identify different types of plants?
- —Have you participated in a project or hobby which involved breeding, caring for, or studying plant life?
- —Have you taken courses in biology or zoology? Do you enjoy conducting experiments which involve plants and animals?
- —Have you been a member of a scouting or environmental protection group? Do you take part in efforts to preserve forests, parks, or campgrounds?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Important academic courses include algebra, geometry, advanced math, chemistry, biological sciences. Technical writing or composition courses are helpful. A bachelor's degree with a major in biology or another life science is generally required. Graduate degrees are needed for most research work or for college teaching. A master's degree may qualify an individual for laboratory teaching. Advanced studies or a Ph.D. are usually required for work in basic research.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some courses and some jobs require workers to cut up or handle tissue and waste products of humans and animals. Some jobs require living or working in remote areas such as forests or deserts.

It is important that life scientists keep informed of developments in their field by attending seminars, reading professional books and magazines, or being active in professional organizations.

02.03 Medical Sciences

Workers in this group are involved in the prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of human and animal diseases, disorders, or injuries. It is common to specialize in specific kinds of illnesses, or special areas or organs of the body. Workers who prefer to be more general may become general practitioners, family practitioners, or may learn to deal with groups of related medical problems. A wide variety of work environments is available to medical workers ranging from large city hospitals and clinics, to home offices in rural areas, to field clinics in the military or in underdeveloped countries.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —perform surgery to correct deformities, repair injuries, or remove diseased organs.

—diagnose and treat diseases of the ear, nose, and throat.
—diagnose and treat mental illnesses.
—remove teeth and perform other mouth surgery.
—examine patients to determine causes of speech defects.
—oversee all medical activities of a hospital.
—examine and treat patients for all physical problems, referring them to specialists when necessary.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

—To do this kind of work, you must be able to:
—use logic and scientific thinking to diagnose and treat human or animal injuries and illnesses.
—deal with people or animals when they are in pain or under stress.
—stay calm and keep your head in emergencies.
—use eyes, hands, and fingers with great skill and accuracy.
—deal both with things that are known and obvious and with things which frequently are not easy to recognize or understand.
—make important decisions using your own judgment.
—make decisions based on information you can measure or verify.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you taken courses in biology, physiology, or anatomy? Can you understand scientific concepts?
—Have you had any training in first-aid techniques? Have you treated an accident victim? Can you work well with people in emotionally upsetting situations?

- Have you dissected an animal? Can you skillfully handle small instruments such as scalpels, syringes, or tweezers?
- Have you watched medical shows on television? Do you enjoy these programs? Can you understand the technical terms used?
- Have you been a medical corpsman in the armed services? Did you learn techniques and terminology that would be helpful in medical school?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Academic courses helpful in preparing for the medical sciences are: algebra, geometry, advanced math, chemistry, biological sciences, English, and Latin. Two to four years of undergraduate study followed by four years of advanced study is considered the minimum preparation. Most doctors serve a one- or two-year internship in an approved hospital after graduation from medical school.

Some physicians spend several additional years in study and training as a resident or intern to specialize. Dentists who specialize, teach, or perform research must have post-graduate courses or complete a residency in a hospital or clinic. Medical doctors, dentists, and veterinarians must have a license to practice.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

The training time and cost involved are significant. Workers must adjust to irregular hours, weekend and holiday work, and 24-hour on-call duties.

Workers should update their knowledge and professional skills through periodic courses and continuous study.

02.04 Laboratory Technology

Workers in this group use special laboratory techniques and equipment to perform tests in the fields of chemistry, biology, or physics. They record information that results from their experiments and tests. They help scientists, medical doctors, researchers, and engineers in their work. Hospitals, government agencies, universities, and private industries employ these workers in their laboratories and research facilities.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —set up and operate laboratory equipment to conduct chemical and physical tests on metal ores.
- —prepare slides and use microscopes to identify diseases in an organ removed by surgery.
- —measure rainfall and riverflow, record findings, and prepare a summary report of conditions.
- —set up equipment to test fire a gun to gather evidence for a criminal investigation.
- —prepare compounds and package prescription drugs.
- —conduct tests on samples from oil drilling operations.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

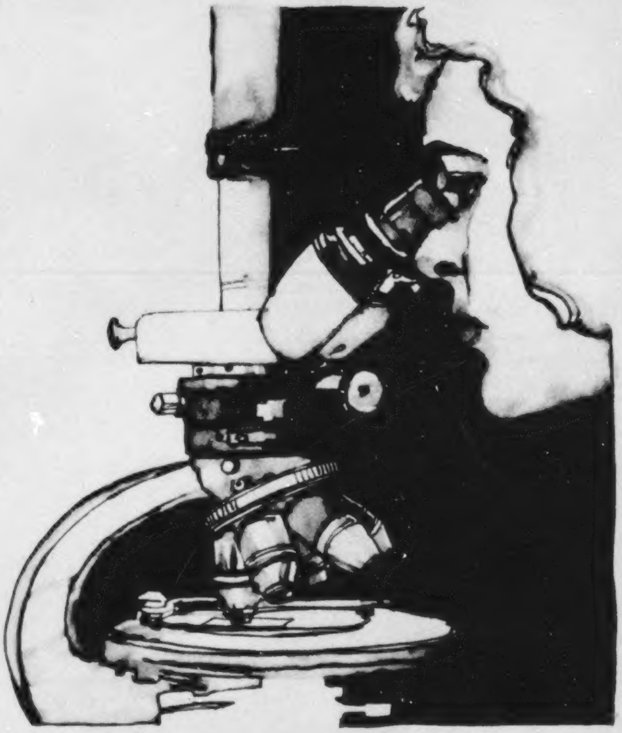
To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand and use scientific and technical language and symbols.
- —recognize slight differences in the shape, color, or texture of things.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers to operate delicate and sensitive equipment.
- —do work that requires being very precise or accurate.
- —follow technical instructions which may be verbal, in writing, or in the form of charts or drawings.
- —use measurable and verifiable information for making decisions or judgments.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you used test tubes, microscopes, or other laboratory instruments? Do you enjoy working with scientific equipment?
- —Have you read scientific or technical manuals or journals? Can you understand the language and symbols used?
- —Have you collected rocks? Can you recognize different minerals that are present?
- —Have you had algebra or geometry courses? Can you read and understand charts and graphs?



- —Have you repaired or assembled a precision device such as a radio or clock? Did it work properly afterwards?
- —Have you had military experience collecting water samples, or conducting blood tests? Do you enjoy this type of work?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most of these jobs are entry positions requiring workers to have a two- to four-year degree. Some workers may move into laboratory or testing work from production areas. On-the-job training is sometimes available to applicants who have appropriate skills or work related experience. Some jobs are offered to those who have taken scientific or technical courses in high school or a post-high school program. Courses in chemistry, physical science, or life science will be helpful.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many medical and technical facilities operate on a 24-hour schedule. Some employees must work at night or at varying hours throughout the week.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

Plants and Animals

03

R

An interest in activities to do with plants and animals, usually in an outdoor setting.

You can satisfy this interest by working in farming, forestry, fishing, and related fields. You may like doing physical work outdoors, such as working on a farm. You may enjoy animals. Perhaps training or taking care of animals would appeal to you. You may have management ability. You could own, operate, or manage farms or related business or services.

Plants and Animals

03.01 Managerial Work: Plants and Animals

03.02 General Supervision: Plants and Animals

03.03 Animal Training and Service

03.04 Elemental Work: Plants and Animals

03.01 Managerial Work: Plants and Animals

Workers in this group operate or manage farming, fishing, forestry, and horticultural service businesses of many kinds. Some of them breed specialty plants and animals. Others provide services to increase production or beautify land areas. Many of them work in rural or woodland areas, on farms, ranches, and forest preserves. Others find employment with commercial nurseries, landscaping firms, business services, or government agencies located in large and small communities all over the country. Many are self-employed, operating their own large or small businesses.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —plan and oversee the sales and shipment of farm crops or animals.

—arrange for the purchase of seed, livestock, fertilizer, feed, and other supplies.
—advise poultry farmers on ways to improve the quality of their products.
—breed earthworms and sell them as bait, or to companies that produce fish food or soil conditioners.
—study market trends to plan the type and quantity of crops to plant.
—plan and direct projects for cutting timber and replanting forests.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:
—understand and apply procedures related to a particular kind of activity in a practical way, such as rotating crops so that farm soil will stay fertile, treating trees with the right chemicals to prevent the spread of disease, or feeding cattle to produce beef of prime quality.
—plan an entire activity and see that it is carried out.
—keep accurate financial and production records.
—get along well with other people in many different work situations, such as overseeing their activities or negotiating with them for the purchase of materials or the sale of products.
—spend much of your time outdoors in all kinds of weather, overseeing or participating in the work being done.

Farm
Manager Calendar

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you raised plants or animals as a hobby? Would you like to take courses to help you expand your hobby?
- —Have you been a member of FFA or 4-H? Did you complete any projects which required planning, budgeting, and record keeping?
- —Have you been a leader in scouting or any other outdoor group? Do you enjoy planning and directing activities?
- —Have you worked all day mowing lawns, planting or trimming trees, or picking fruit? Could you do or supervise this type of work every day?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most of the jobs in this group are open only to people with work experience. Growing up on a farm is good initial preparation for many of these jobs. Formal training for management jobs is available at the high school and post-high school levels. For example, vocational agriculture courses are offered in many high schools with similar courses available to adults at night and on weekends. Programs such as agribusiness, animal husbandry, forest management, and small business management are provided by many colleges and technical schools. Each state has at least one college which offers four or five year programs in related fields.

Workers with training in management and farm experience qualify for jobs with cooperative groups, corporations, and large farm owners. Some workers form companies which contract to provide farm services.

Courses in horticulture, gardening, or turf management provide preparation for jobs in nurseries, tree services, and landscaping firms.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Federal loans are available to qualified people who wish to start their own businesses. Most of these businesses are small and hire few people.

03.02 General Supervision: Plants and Animals

Workers in this group supervise others, and often work right along with them, on farms or ranches, fish hatcheries or forests, plant nurseries or parks. Most of them work in rural or forest locations, but some jobs are located in city or suburban areas. Some of these workers travel throughout an area to inspect or treat croplands for insects or disease, or supervise workers performing agricultural or lawn care services.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- supervise workers in planting, cultivating, and harvesting all farm crops.
- supervise workers in milking, breeding, and caring for dairy cows.
- supervise workers in planting, cultivating, harvesting, and packing seedling forest trees.
- supervise workers in incubating eggs and caring for fish in a state hatchery.
- inspect fields for presence of insects or plant disease.
- coordinate activities of crew of workers engaged in caring for park grounds.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- get a clear picture of the work to be done during a specific time period, as explained to you by the manager of the business, and pass this information along clearly to the workers you supervise.
- assign duties to workers according to your judgment of their capabilities, and the amount of work to be done.
- demonstrate the use of tools and equipment to other workers, and show them ways of doing their jobs more efficiently.
- organize details and use basic arithmetic to keep time and production records for the workers you supervise, or prepare reports of areas you inspect.
- work outdoors in all kinds of weather, sometimes performing tasks that require strenuous activities.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you been in charge of a scout troop or other group during a clean-up campaign? Did the members follow your directions?
- Have you been a member of FFA or 4-H? Did you have a project related to farming, fishing, or forestry?
- Have you worked a whole day mowing lawns, cutting weeds, or picking fruit? Could you do this type of work every day? Are you interested in supervising this type of work?
- Have you had military experience as a work detail leader? Did you like being responsible for getting the work done?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most workers must have related work experience. They must know about the tools, processes, and methods used by the workers they supervise. This involves having practical knowledge of wide variety of tasks.

Almost all workers in this group start out in routine jobs in the same or similar work location. They are promoted to these jobs after showing that they have leadership ability and are thoroughly familiar with the work.

Vocational and technical courses in agriculture, forestry, or related fields provide a helpful background for some of these jobs.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group may help to do many of the physical tasks they supervise. These workers are exposed to all types of weather conditions as well as natural hazards as storms, fires, and extremes of temperatures.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

03.03 Animal Training and Service

Workers in this group take care of animals of many kinds, and train them for a variety of purposes. They work in pet shops, testing laboratories, animal shelters, and veterinarians' offices. Some are employed by zoos, aquariums, circuses, and at other places where animals are exhibited or used in entertainment acts. Others work for animal training or obedience schools, or in stables or kennels maintained by individuals or such facilities as race tracks or riding academies. These workers are not employed on farms, ranches, or other places where animals are raised as crops.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —train and condition horses for racing.
- —train animals to obey commands, compete in shows, or perform tricks.
- —feed, water, and care for mice, guinea pigs, monkeys, and other animals in a hospital or research laboratory.
- —feed, exercise, and groom horses to protect their health and improve their appearance.
- —bathe and groom pets for their owners.
- —control aquarium water temperature and acidity and meet other needs of aquatic life.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand the habits and physical needs of the animals you care for, and think of each of them on an individual basis.
- —use your hands and fingers skillfully to perform such tasks as trimming the nails of dogs and cats without hurting them, fastening shoes to horses' hooves, or helping a veterinarian give shots to sick animals.
- —observe the animals you care for to notice changes in their appearance, appetite, or behavior, which might mean that they are sick.

- —stay very patient while going over and over the same routines with animals, to train them to perform or to respond to commands.
- —keep calm during emergencies.
- —do the hard physical work needed to keep stables and other animal quarters clean, using equipment such as shovels, pitchforks, rakes, mops, and high-pressure hoses.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you raised or cared for an animal? Do you enjoy the responsibility of caring for an animal?
- —Have you taken care of a sick or an injured animal? Can you tell if an animal is getting sick or getting better by the way it looks or acts?
- —Have you had a hobby raising small animals or fish? Did you use eyedroppers, strainers or other tools to feed, treat, or care for them?
- —Have you had military experience training animals? Were you patient with the animal when you had to repeat commands many times? Did the animals learn what you were teaching?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over four years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most beginning workers are given a few simple duties. More responsibility is added as these workers gain experience. Some high schools, vocational schools, and junior colleges have courses in animal care. These courses cover the housing and feeding of animals, basic zoology and anatomy, and methods of treating sick or injured animals.

Some of these jobs require special skills. For instance, workers who train or exercise horses must know how to ride, and those who work for aquariums must know how to swim.

Jobs which involve training guide dogs, saddle horses, or animal performers are given to workers who have at least six months experience in the care of animals.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Expansion in testing of food and drugs by government agencies will increase the need for people to care for laboratory animals. An increase in the number of household pets will create jobs for animal groomers, veterinary hospital helpers, and other pet-care workers.

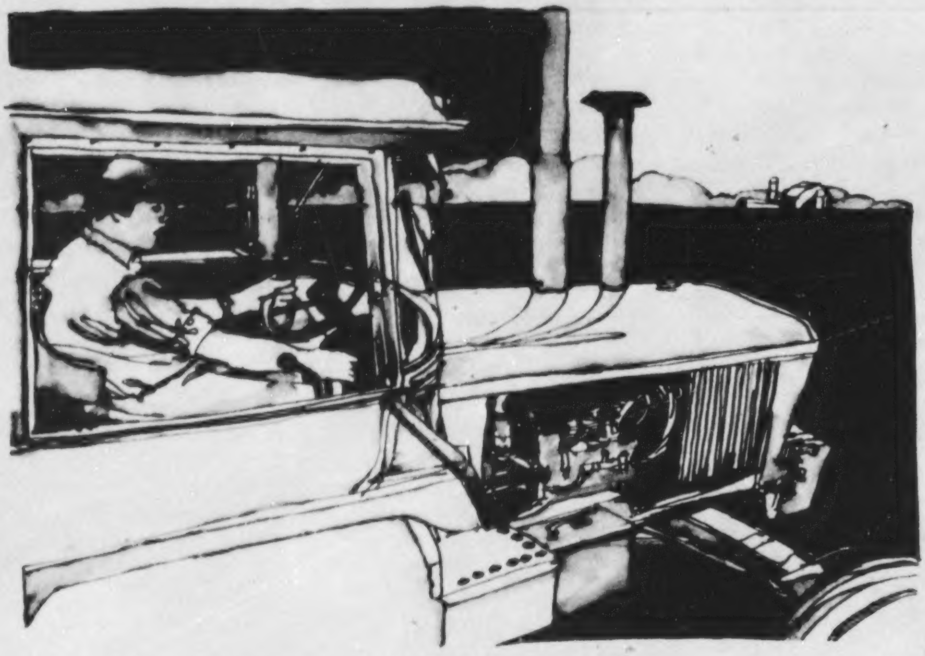
03.04 Elemental Work: Plants and Animals

Workers in this group perform active physical tasks, usually in an outdoor, non-industrial setting. They work with their hands, use various kinds of tools and equipment, or operate machinery. They find employment on farms or ranches, at logging camps or fish hatcheries, in forests or game preserves, or with commercial fishing businesses where they may work onshore or in fishing boats. In urban areas, they work in parks, gardens, or nurseries, or for businesses that provide horticultural or agricultural services.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —operate farm machinery to plant, cultivate, harvest, and store grain crops.
- —use shovels, hoes, and shears to plant, cultivate, and prune fruit trees.
- —walk, stoop, crawl, or sit between rows of hops, peanuts, or tobacco to harvest the crop.
- —use an auger or ax to cut a tap in trees to collect sap.
- —use an ax and chainsaw to clear a path for trees to be felled.
- —set and haul in large commercial fishing nets by hand or using a winch.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to :

- —work outside for long periods of time and in all kinds of weather, performing tasks that require physical strength and endurance.
- —follow instructions exactly.
- —adjust to doing the same kind of work all day long, with little opportunity for diversion, or perform a variety of different tasks on the same day, as they are needed to carry out the activities of the business.
- —work quickly and skillfully with you hands, to do such things as picking fruit or vegetables, sawing or sorting logs, or operating tractors or lawn mowers.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you worked a whole day mowing lawns, cutting weeds, or picking fruit? Could you do this type of work every day?
- —Have you used rakes, shovels, saws, or other tools? Do you like to work with your hands?
- —Have you been a member of FFA or 4-H? Did you have a project related to farming, fishing, or forestry?
- —Do you like to camp, fish, or hunt? Would you like a full-time job doing these activities?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over three months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Prior training is not required for most jobs in this group. Training is usually given by the employer when workers are hired or when their duties are changed. Most employers require job applicants to be in good physical condition, and commercial fisheries hire only persons who can swim for jobs on fishing boats. To be eligible for jobs in local, state or national parks, or with other government agencies, applicants must take and pass Civil Service examinations. Some vocational high schools offer courses in general farming, farm animal care, and equipment operation, and a few participate in work/study projects. This kind of training can help you get jobs of this kind, since employers don't have to spend as much time training you after employment.

Many vocational schools and training programs offer related courses.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Jobs in this group may involve frequent bending and crouching. Machines and equipment may reduce the amount of heavy physical work. However, these laborsavers may also lead to fewer job openings.

Many of these jobs require long hours of hard work at certain times of the year, such as when planting or harvesting crops. Sometimes extra workers are hired for short periods of time to help in these busy seasons. Persons wanting full-time work need to look for other jobs in the off-season.

Some workers in this group must face hazards such as storms, forest fires, and extreme temperatures.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

Protective

04

An interest in using authority to protect people and property. You can satisfy this interest by working in law enforcement, fire fighting, and related fields. You may enjoy mental challenge and intrigue. You could investigate crimes or fires. You may prefer to fight fires and respond to other emergencies. Or may want more routine work. Perhaps a job in guarding or patrolling would appeal to you. You may have management ability. You could seek a leadership position in law enforcement and the protective services.

04.01 Safety and Law Enforcement

04.02 Security Services

04.01 Safety and Law Enforcement

Workers in this group are in charge of enforcing laws and regulations. Some investigate crimes, while others supervise workers who stop or arrest lawbreakers. Others make inspections to be sure that the laws are not broken. Most jobs are found in the Federal, State, or local governments, such as the Police and Fire Departments. Some are found in private businesses, such as factories, stores, and similar places.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —set procedures, prepare work schedules, and assign duties for jailers.
- —direct and coordinate daily activities of a police force.
- —direct and coordinate activities of a fire department.
- —hire, assign, and supervise store detectives.
- —investigate and arrest persons suspected of the illegal sale or use of drugs.
- —patrol an assigned area in a vehicle or on foot and issue tickets, investigate disturbances, render first aid, and arrest suspects.
- —patrol an assigned area to observe hunting and fishing activities and warn or arrest persons violating fish and game laws.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work you must be able to:

- —work with laws and regulations, sometimes written in legal language.
- —use practical thinking to conduct or supervise investigations.
- —supervise other workers.
- —plan the work of a department or activity.
- —deal with various kinds of people.
- —work under pressure or in the face of danger.
- —patrol an assigned area to observe hunting and fishing activities and warn or arrest persons violating fish and game laws.
- —keep physically fit.
- —use guns, fire-fighting equipment, and other safety devices.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you had courses in government, civics, or criminology? Did you find these subjects interesting?
- —Have you been a member of a volunteer fire department or emergency rescue squad? Were you given training for this work?
- —Have you watched detective television shows? Do you read detective stories? Do you try to solve mysteries?
- —Have you been an officer of a school safety patrol? Do you like being responsible for the work of others?
- —Have you used a gun for hunting or in target practice? Are you a good shot?
- —Have you spoken at a civic or community organization? Do you like work that requires frequent public speaking?
- —Have you been a military officer?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Local civil service regulations usually control the selection of police officers. People who want to do this kind of work must meet certain requirements. They must be U. S. citizens and be within certain height and weight ranges. In addition, they may be required to take written, oral, and physical examinations. The physical examinations often include tests of physical strength and the ability to move quickly and easily. To work in these jobs, persons should have the physical condition to use firearms or work on dangerous missions. Personal investigations are made of all applicants.

Most police departments prefer to hire people who have a high school education or its equal. However, some departments hire people if they have worked in related activities, such as guarding or volunteer police work.

Jobs with federal law enforcement agencies usually require a college degree. For example, to be hired as customs enforcement officer, a degree or three years of related work experience is required. FBI Special Agents are required to have a degree in law or accounting. Accounting degrees should be coupled with at least one year of related work experience.

Most management or supervisory jobs in this group are filled from within the ranks. Promotions are usually based on written examinations and job performance and are usually subject to civil service laws.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Most workers in these jobs are on call any time their services are needed. They may work overtime during emergencies. Many of these jobs expose workers to great physical danger.

04.02 Security Services

Workers in this group protect people and animals from injury or danger. They enforce laws, investigate suspicious persons or acts, prevent crime, and fight fires. Some of the jobs are found in Federal, State, or local governments. Some workers are hired by railroads, hotels, lumber yards, industrial plants, and amusement establishments. Some work on their own, acting as bodyguards, or private detectives.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —guard money and valuables being transported by an armored car.
- —patrol a section of an international border to detect persons attempting to enter the country illegally.
- —move among customers in a place of entertainment to preserve order and protect property.
- —guard inmates and direct their activities in a penal institution.
- —respond to alarms to fight fires, render first aid, and protect property.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —learn and apply rules and procedures which are sometimes hard to understand.
- —use reason and judgment in dealing with all kinds of people in different ways.
- —think clearly and react quickly in emergencies.
- —keep physically fit.
- —use guns and safety equipment skillfully.
- —make conclusions based on facts and also on your personal judgment.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you been a member of a school safety patrol? Did you like enforcing safety rules?
- —Have you used a gun for hunting or target practice? Are you a good shot?
- —Have you worked as a camp counselor or other group leader? Do you like helping people?
- —Have you been a member of a volunteer fire or rescue squad? Can you stay calm in emergencies?
- —Have you taken a first aid course? Can you treat injuries quickly and skillfully?
- —Have you been a member of a military police force or rescue team?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. People with experience in the military, local, or state police are often preferred. Some employers want people with a high school education or its equal.

People interested in these jobs must have character references and no police record. Some employers require a demonstration of skill in using firearms. Written and physical tests also may be required.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some of these jobs involve night work. People often work alone, with no help nearby in case of accident or injury. In some jobs, they take turns working daytime, weekend, and holiday hours. There is always a danger of bodily injury by lawbreakers.

Workers are often required to have special insurance to protect the employer against dishonesty. They may also be fingerprinted.

Mechanical

05

An interest in applying mechanical principles to practical situations using machines, hand tools, or techniques. You can satisfy this interest in a variety of jobs ranging from routine to complex professional positions. You may enjoy working with ideas about things (objects). You could seek a job in engineering or in a related technical field. You may prefer to deal directly with things. You could find a job in the crafts or trades, building, making or repairing objects. You may like to drive or to operate vehicles and special equipment. You may prefer routine or physical work in settings other than factories. Perhaps work in mining or construction would appeal to you.

05.01 Engineering

Workers in this group plan, design, and direct the construction or development of buildings, bridges, roads, airports, dams, sewage systems, air-conditioning systems, mining machinery, and other structures and equipment They also develop processes and/or techniques for generating and transmitting electrical power, manufacturing chemicals, extracting metals from ore, and controlling the quality of products being made. Workers specialize in one or more kinds of engineering, such as civil, electrical, mechanical, mining, and safety. Some are hired by industrial plants, petroleum and mining companies, research laboratories, and construction companies. Others find employment with Federal, State, and local governments. Some have their own engineering firms, and accept work from various individuals or companies.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —establish computational methods and computer input data to analyze problems in aircraft design.

—apply knowledge of properties of various materials to the development of electronic and electrical circuits.

—design facilities and equipment for an electrical distribution system.

—use computers to conduct technical research to solve construction problems in designing airport structures.

—conduct research to develop new and improved chemical manufacturing processes.

—analyze technical and cost factors to plan methods to recover oil and gas.

—apply knowledge of the properties of metals to develop improved welding techniques, procedures, and equipment.

—analyze manpower and equipment usage to improve efficiency of industrial operations.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—use high level mathematics.

—understand principles of chemistry, geology, physics, and related sciences.

—solve problems, using facts and personal judgment.

—work on different projects and with changing situations.

—deal with various kinds of people.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you read mechanical or automotive design magazines? Do you enjoy and understand the technical articles?

—Have you taken courses in algebra, geometry, and advanced math? Can you solve practical problems using math?

—Have you built a model airplane, automobile, or bridge? Can you look at a blueprint or drawing and visualize the final structure?

—Have you taken physics courses? Do you like to study energy and matter?

—Have you built or repaired a radio, television, or amplifier? Do you understand electrical or electronic terms and drawings?

—Have you served in an engineering section of the armed forces?

How can you prepare for and enter this type of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Engineers whose work affects life, health, or property, or who serve the public must be licensed. A degree from an accredited engineering school, four years of related experience, and the passing of a state examination are common requirements for a license.

79

A bachelor's degree in engineering is usually required for entering this type of work. College graduates trained in one of the natural sciences or mathematics may qualify for a few beginning jobs. Experienced technicians with some engineering education may be advanced to engineering jobs.

Most engineering schools require an average or above average high school record in mathematics, physics, chemistry, and English for admission. Other courses such as history and social studies are helpful in gaining an understanding of fields related to engineering.

A typical four-year curriculum includes two years of study in the basic sciences, such as mathematics, physics, chemistry, introductory engineering, social sciences, and English. The last two years are devoted to specialized engineering courses.

Several engineering schools have agreements with liberal arts colleges to allow students to spend three years in the college and two years in the engineering school. A bachelor's degree is then granted by each. Some engineering schools offer a five or six year cooperative work-study program in which the students alternate periods in school with employment in related jobs. This permits students to earn a part of their tuition costs and get on-the-job experience as they learn.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many engineers work under quiet conditions in modern offices and research laboratories. Others work in mines, factories, at construction sites, or at outdoor locations.

05.02 Managerial Work: Mechanical

Workers in this group manage industrial plants or systems where technical work is being performed. Jobs are found in oil fields, power plants, transportation companies, radio and television networks, and telephone and related communications systems.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —direct operations of a major generating plant of an electrical power system.
- —coordinate engineering, construction, operation, and maintenance activities of a cross-country pipeline.
- —direct studies of an existing communications system for a transportation firm and analyze results to plan equipment replacement.
- —direct workers who repair and maintain motor transportation equipment to insure safe and efficient operation.
- —analyze machine and tool requisitions to determine whether to make tools in the plant or purchase them.
- —inspect landfill sites and operations to plan with supervisory personnel the most efficient way to utilize available space.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand technologies required in the work you are directing.
- —plan and direct the work of others, either directly or through lower level supervisors.
- —work with a variety of situations.
- —solve problems, using facts and personal judgment.
- —react quickly in emergency situations and make decisions that may involve a great amount of money or the safety of others.
- —work with different kinds of people.

How do you know if you would like or could learn this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken courses in advanced mathematics? Can you understand and work with mathematical concepts?
- —Have you taken a physics course? Can you understand and work with the principles of matter and energy?
- —Have you collected rocks or minerals as a hobby? Can you identify them?
- —Have you owned a chemistry set or microscope? Do you enjoy testing new ideas?
- —Have you served in an engineering section of the armed forces?

MANAGER

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. College level courses in both management and technical fields are usually required. Most jobs require supervisory experience. Some industries, such as public utilities, offer on-the-job training in management techniques. Seminars in principles of electronic data processing are often a part of this training.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in these jobs must make policy decisions as well as operational decisions. These decisions must conform to the overall company policy and must be made quickly. These workers may have to work overtime without additional pay. However, they often receive benefits such as bonuses, stock options, and profit sharing plans.

Although they spend much of their time in an office doing paper work, they frequently tour work sites. While visiting these sites they observe operation, monitor progress, detect possible problems, and give directions to workers.

These workers are usually specialists and can transfer only to another firm in the same or a related industry.

05.03 Engineering Technology

Workers in this group collect, record, and coordinate technical information in such activities as surveying, drafting, petroleum production, communications control, and materials scheduling. Workers find jobs in construction, factories, engineering and architectural firms, airports, and research laboratories.

What kind of work would you do?

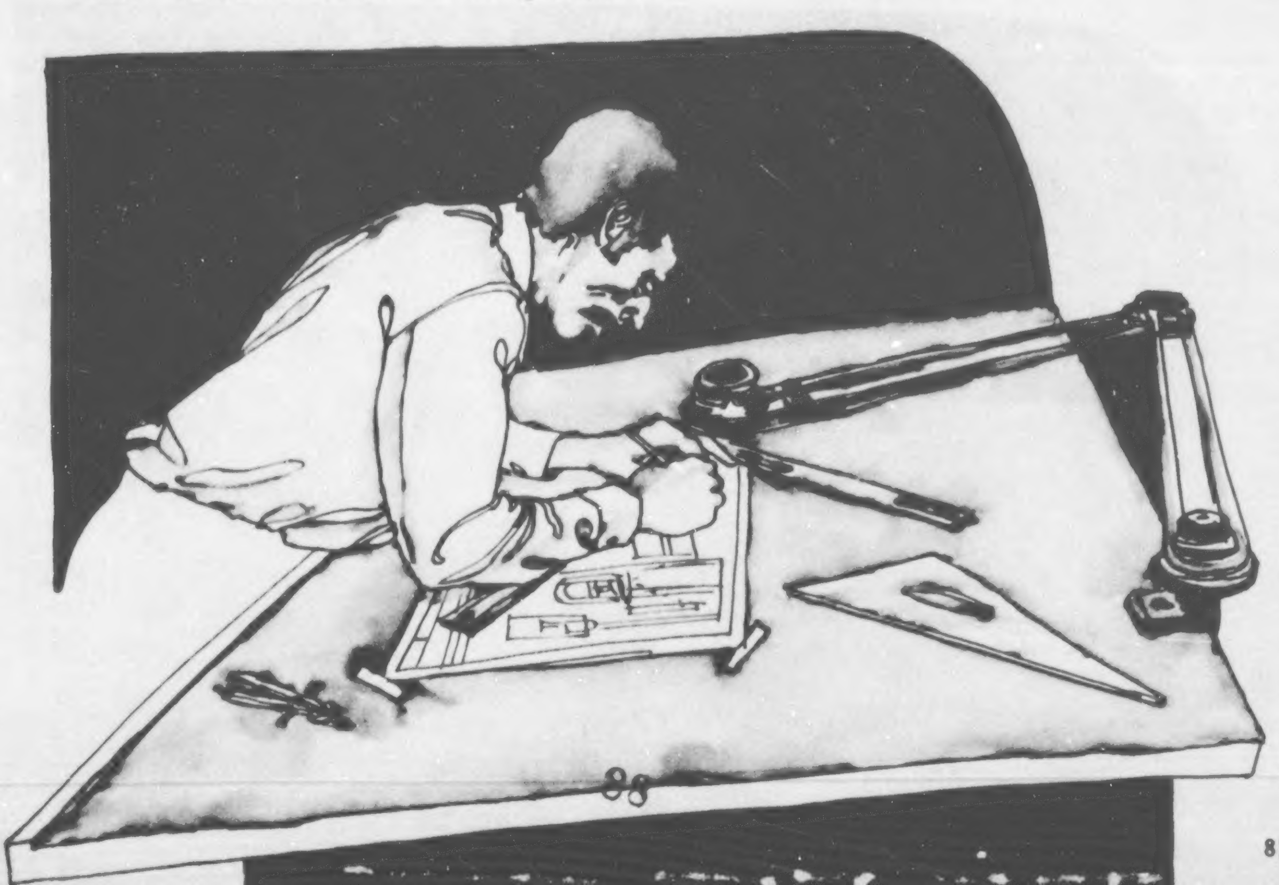
Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —use astronomical observations, complex computations, and other techniques to compile data for preparing geodetic maps and charts.
- —organize and direct the work of surveying parties to determine precise location and measurement points.
- —use drafting instruments to prepare detailed drawings and blueprints for manufacturing electronic equipment.
- —prepare detailed working drawings of mechanical devices showing dimensions, tolerances, and other engineering data.
- —analyze survey data, source maps, and other records to draw detailed maps to scale.
- —provide meteorological, navigational, and other technical information to pilots.
- —direct activities of workers who set up seismographic recording instruments and gather data about oil-bearing rock layers.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —use geometry and other kinds of higher mathematics.
- —use clear language to write technical reports.
- —perform detail work with great accuracy.
- —use fingers skillfully when making drawings.
- —make finger and hand movements correspond with seeing to operate equipment, adjust instruments, use pen to make sketches, or use measuring tools.
- —make decisions quickly according to both personal judgment and facts.
- —direct activities of workers who set up seismographic recording instruments and gather data about oil-bearing rock layers.
- —perform under stress in emergency situations.



How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you taken courses in mechanical drawing? Do you enjoy this type of activity?
- Have you taken courses in geometry and advanced math? Do you like math studies?
- Have you made models of airplanes or cars following detailed plans? Can you follow such instructions easily?
- Have you taken courses in physics or chemistry? Can you work with formulas?
- Have you served in an engineering unit in the armed forces? Did you like the work involved?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. The most common way of preparing for this kind of work is through related post high school courses, on-the-job training, and work experience.

Many technical and vocational schools, and community colleges offer programs in surveying. With some classroom instruction in surveying, beginners can start as instrument workers. After gaining experience, they may advance to supervisory positions, and may later apply for positions as registered surveyors. Advancement may be based on written examinations as well as experience. High school graduates with no formal training usually start by assisting instrument workers.

Basic preparation for jobs in drafting includes high school level courses in mathematics, physical sciences, industrial arts, and mechanical drawing. Technical school courses in structural design and layout provide the knowledge and skills needed for advanced drafting jobs. A three- to four-year apprenticeship program is another method for entering drafting work. This program offers workers the advantages of classroom instruction and on-the-job training while they earn regular wages.

College courses in business administration or industrial engineering provide the most common preparation for jobs in production and material coordination. People with a high school education and work experience in a production firm may be admitted to on-the-job training programs. High school studies should include commercial courses, industrial arts, and bookkeeping or accounting. English courses are also important because they develop oral and written communications skills.

Technicians usually begin work as trainees in routine jobs under close supervision of an experienced technician or engineer. As they gain experience, they move up to jobs requiring less supervision. With additional training and experience, technicians may advance to supervisory or professional engineering positions.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Surveyors usually have a 40-hour work week. They sometimes work longer hours during the summer months. Most surveying work is done outdoors in all types of weather. However, workers usually prepare reports, and draw maps in an office setting. Surveyors are exposed to hazards from moving machinery and falling objects on construction projects. There is danger from passing cars when surveying on or near highways. Some surveying work requires traveling to distant job sites or camping out at the site.

Drafters may have to buy some of their own equipment. However, most companies supply them with the equipment they need. They generally work in comfortable, well-lighted, air conditioned offices. They sometimes visit work sites such as factories or construction projects. At times they may work under pressure to meet deadlines.

05.04 Air and Water Vehicle Operation

Workers in this group pilot airplanes or ships, or supervise others who do. Some instruct other persons in flying. Most of these workers are hired by shipping companies and commercial airlines. Some find jobs piloting planes or ships for private companies or for individuals.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —study load weight, fuel supply, weather conditions, and flight route to plan for a safe commercial plane flight.
- —pilot a new airplane through stalls, dives, glides, rolls, and turns to test design and safety factors.
- —use knowledge of local winds, weather, tides, and current to pilot a ship through a harbor or strait.
- —use charts, plotting sheets, compass, and sextant to plan and direct course of a ship.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand and use techniques and procedures for controlling the airplane or vessel.
- —use judgment and make decisions that affect the lives of passengers on board.
- —react quickly in emergencies.
- —direct the crew on board.
- —see readings on instrument panels clearly.
- —use hand, feet, and eyes at the same time to control the ship or airplane.
- —deal with different kinds of people.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you read airplane or boat magazines? Do you understand and enjoy technical articles?
- —Have you built or operated a model airplane? Could you read and follow the instructions?
- —Have you been a member of a Civil Air Patrol unit? Have you had flight or ground training?
- —Have you operated a citizen's band radio? Do you understand the regulations regarding its use? Can you understand and use the common code words?
- —Have you driven in a bicycle rodeo, car rally, or other vehicle obstacle course? Did you receive a good score?
- —Have you owned or operated a pleasure boat? Have you taken a Coast Guard safety training course?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Flight training may be obtained in the military or in FAA approved civilian flight schools. A high school education or its equal is the minimum requirement for acceptance.

Most major airlines have their own programs to provide additional specialized training before assigning pilots to service. Some airlines require a pilot to have two years of college. Many prefer college graduates. Before becoming an airline pilot, a person must have 1,500 hours of flying time.

Ship captains advance through several officer ranks. The beginning rank is that of third mate. Most third mate positions are earned by completing a training course at a marine academy.

Some marine trade unions offer programs to train seamen to become third mates. These trainees must be U.S. citizens and be approved by the U.S. Public Health Service for vision and general health. They must also pass Coast Guard tests on navigation, freight handling, and deck operations.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Pilots are often under mental stress and must always be alert and ready to make decisions quickly. Airlines have flights at all hours of the day and night. Pilots may be away from home frequently. Ship officers are usually away from home for long periods. Workers in this group face the possibility of injury through fires, collisions, and other disasters.

05.05 Craft Technology

Workers in this group perform highly skilled hand and/or machine work requiring special techniques, training, and experience. Work occurs in a variety of nonfactory settings. Some workers own their own shops.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —study blueprints and specifications for setting up a machine that shapes metal bolts and screws.

—lay out, drill, turn, grind, and fit metal castings to make patterns for use in a foundry.

—use knowledge of tool design, shop mathematics, metal properties, and machining procedures to make or repair machine tools.

—use handtools, precision-measuring instruments, and machine tools to repair diesel engines.

—use grinders, planers, millers, and handtools to repair or modify rifles and handguns.

—follow blueprints and use handtools and power tools to assemble or repair boilers and tanks in an industrial plant.

—lay brick or cement blocks to build a wall.

—follow blueprints and plans to measure, cut, fit, and nail wooden parts for a structure.

—set up and operate a variety of woodworking machines to make or repair cabinets and fine furniture.

—repair and maintain generators, alternators, motors, and communications systems aboard a ship.

—set up, adjust, and operate a printing press in a publishing company.

—adjust pipes and mechanisms in an organ to correct tone, pitch, or mechanical problems.

—make casts and prepare and fit artificial limbs.

—cut, shape, and polish precious gems and stones.

—develop designs and make tailored suits and coats for men.

—plan menus, order supplies, and oversee food preparation for a large motel.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —skillfully use handtools or machines needed for your work.
- —read blueprints and drawings of the items to be made or repaired.
- —measure, cut, or otherwise work on materials or objects with great preciseness.
- —use arithmetic and shop geometry to figure amounts of materials needed, dimensions to be followed, and cost of materials.
- —picture what the finished product will look like.
- —accept responsibility for the accuracy of the work as it is turned out.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you had hobbies such as model building which required assembling parts in a certain manner? Are you able to follow detailed instructions accurately?
- —Have you read magazines or trade papers about mechanics? Are you able to understand mechanical details?
- —Have you repaired an extension cord or lamp? Can you figure out how things work without looking at directions?
- —Have you made minor repairs to a house? Do you enjoy working with your hands?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. A four-year formal apprenticeship is the best way to become a general machinist. Training includes the learning of proper machine speeds and feeds, and the operation of various machine tools. Apprentices are also trained in the use of handtools and assembly procedures. They study blueprint reading, shop mathematics, shop practices, and mechanical drawing. High school or vocational school courses in industrial mathematics, physics, machine ship, and mechanical drawing are very useful. Some machinists learn their trade without serving an apprenticeship.

Many mechanics and repairers acquire their skills by working with experienced workers for several years or through apprenticeship training. Some get basic training or increase their skills in vocational and technical schools or by taking correspondence courses. Experience in the armed forces may also help workers gain entry into occupations in this group.

Many high schools and vocational schools offer basic mechanics courses in cooperation with local employers. The programs last from two to three years. Courses in mathematics, physics, electronics, blueprint reading, and machine shop are helpful.

Most automobile mechanics learn their skills on the job. They usually start as helpers, lubrication workers, or gasoline station attendants. However, there are formal training programs available. Three to four years experience is required to become a general automobile mechanic. Experienced mechanics may advance to shop supervisors or service managers. Many mechanics open their own repair shops or gasoline service stations.

Formal apprenticeship training lasting three to four years is the best way to acquire the skills required in the construction trades. Apprentices generally must be at least 18 years of age, and in good physical condition. A high school or a vocational school education is desirable and should include courses in mathematics, mechanical drawing, carpentry, and electricity.

Although apprenticeship is the best way to train for these occupations, many people acquire construction skills by working as laborers and helpers and observing skilled workers. Some acquire skills by attending vocational or trade schools or by taking correspondence school courses.

Craft workers, such as electricians, are required to have a license to work in some localities. They must pass an examination to demonstrate a broad knowledge of the job and of state and local regulations.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many of these workers are required to follow strict safety regulations. Machine workers must wear safety glasses and other protective devices. Construction workers are usually required to wear hard hats and sometimes safety straps and shoes.

Many people prefer construction work because it permits them to be outdoors. However, the weather and seasons sometimes affect the availability of work.

Many workers are required to furnish their own handtools.

05.06 Systems Operation

Workers in this group operate and maintain equipment in an overall system, or a section of a system, for such purposes as generating and distributing electricity; treating and providing water to customers; pumping oil from oilfields to storage tanks; making ice in an ice plant; and providing telephone service to users. These jobs are found in utility companies, refineries, construction projects, large apartment houses and industrial establishments, and with city and county governments.

What kind of work would you do?

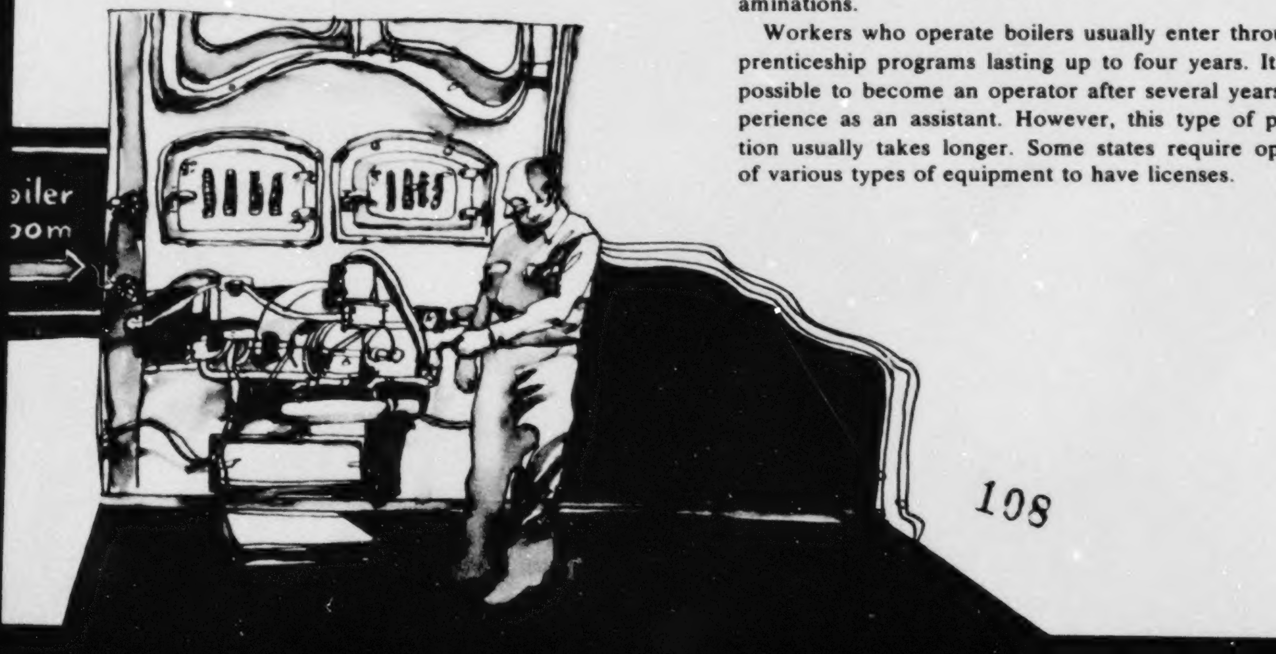
Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —coordinate activities of power-line crews and workers in generating stations and substations to insure adequate production and distribution of power.
- —watch panelboard and adjust throttle and valves to regulate turbines which generate electricity.
- —operate and maintain steam engines, air compressors, generators, motors, and steam boilers to provide heat and power to a building complex.
- —study gas supplies and customer demands to coordinate flow of natural gas through pipes.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —learn the functioning of the overall system, as well as the part you are involved in.
- —use judgment and make decisions to keep the system operating.
- —remain calm in face of emergencies.
- —use arithmetic.
- —direct the work of others.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers to operate or adjust equipment.



How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken shop or mechanical drawing courses? Do you enjoy working with machines?
- —Have you taken courses that required you to solve problems by using mathematical formulas?
- —Have you taken physics courses? Do you understand the principles of electricity?
- —Have you operated a model train layout? Can you spot and correct malfunctions?
- —Have you subscribed to or read on a regular basis magazines about mechanics?
- —Have you worked in electricity, electronics, or mechanics in the armed forces?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Operators of systems which transmit oil or natural gas usually start as helpers. High school and vocational school courses in machine shop, mechanical drawing, mathematics, and physics are helpful.

Water and sewage treatment plants are usually government operated and jobs usually require civil service examinations.

Workers who operate boilers usually enter through apprenticeship programs lasting up to four years. It is also possible to become an operator after several years of experience as an assistant. However, this type of preparation usually takes longer. Some states require operators of various types of equipment to have licenses.

Operators of generating or distributing systems for electricity usually start as manual workers. They advance as they become experienced. One to four years of experience is usually required to develop the necessary knowledge and skills. Some cities and states require licenses for these workers.

Workers in atomic-powered plants must have special training. Some of them must be licensed by appropriate nuclear regulatory commissions or authorities.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many systems are operated 24 hours a day and require one or more operators to be on duty at all times. Work hours often include weekends and holidays. Sometimes shift work is required.

Operators of boilers are sometimes exposed to high temperatures, dust, dirt, and fumes. They may have to crawl inside boilers and work in cramped spaces to inspect, clean, or repair interiors.

05.07 Quality Control

Workers in this group inspect and/or test materials and products to be sure they meet standards. The work is carried out in a non-factory setting, and includes such activities as grading logs at a lumber yard, inspecting bridges to be sure they are safe; inspecting gas lines for leaks, and grading gravel for use in building roads. Jobs may be found with construction companies, sawmills, petroleum refineries, and utility companies.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —inspect automobiles to see that they meet state safety laws.
- —patrol oil or gas pipeline to locate and repair leaks.
- —inspect boilers and pipes to locate leaks and identify needed repairs.
- —check pressures, gages, and structures to certify the readiness of an airplane for flight.
- —inspect crude and refined petroleum before and after transfer from terminal tanks to ship tanks.
- —measure and examine logs to determine grade according to specifications.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —learn all about the product, materials, or structure you are inspecting or testing.
- —use specifications, blueprints, and written directions to make decisions about the quality of the object or material you are inspecting.
- —use measuring and testing equipment.
- —keep records and make reports.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you had courses in mechanical drawing or drafting? Can you read blueprints and diagrams?
- —Have you inspected cars, appliances, or furniture for surface defects? Do you notice small details?
- —Have you taken industrial arts or vocational courses? Can you use rulers, micrometers, scales, and other measuring devices?
- —Have you had military experience inspecting equipment or materials? Did you like the work?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from six months to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Some jobs in this group are open only to those who are familiar with the materials, processes, or products involved. These workers often get the necessary experience as unskilled workers in the same setting. Other jobs require the ability to read blueprints or specifications. High school or vocational courses in machine shop, mechanical drawing, or blueprint reading are helpful in developing these skills. A few jobs require experience as a skilled worker to develop the knowledge needed to judge quality. Most workers receive on-the-job training in order to learn procedures or to learn how to use measuring or testing equipment.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Working conditions for inspectors are similar to those for other workers at the site.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

—Have you driven in a bicycle rodeo, car rally, or other vehicle obstacle course?

—Have you driven a car pulling a trailer? Could you back safely into a narrow space?

—Have you filled out forms to order something from a mail order catalog? Can you understand and complete such forms accurately?

—Have you repaired or customized an automobile? Do you like working with or operating motor vehicles?

—Have you operated a motorboat? Are you able to dock safely?

—Have you operated model train layouts? Did you enjoy this activity?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over one year, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most states require truck drivers to have chauffeur's licenses. A physical check-up, a written examination, and a driving test are usually required for these licenses. Driver education courses offered by high schools and private schools are helpful. Truck driving courses are offered by some private vocational schools.

The U. S. Department of Transportation sets standards for truckers driving from state to state. Long distance truckers must take a written test on the Motor Carrier Safety Regulations. They must also pass a driving test with the type of truck they will drive on the job. A good driving record is also required. Many firms have height and weight limits for their drivers. Others hire only those with several years of long-distance trucking experience.

Requirements for local drivers vary with the type of truck driven and the business of the employer. The requirements are much like those for the long-haul truckers. New workers may learn by riding with a veteran driver, but more training is given if a special type of truck is to be used. Some firms have classes on general duties, operating and loading procedures, as well as company rules and records.

Locomotive engineers are promoted from engine helpers (locomotive firer) according to seniority rules. Helpers ride with engineers and learn to inspect locomotives, watch for signals and track obstructions, and check gages. Railroads prefer that engineer helpers have a high school education or its equal. Helpers are eligible for promotion when they pass tests about locomotive equipment and operation.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some of these workers drive for long periods of time. Others make stops for deliveries. Some may help load or unload freight.

Long distance truck drivers may spend days or weeks at a time away from home. Their work often includes night driving. Although advancement in trucking is limited, some drivers become supervisors or managers. Others with business ability become owner-operators.

Locomotive engineers often work nights and weekends. Those in road service may operate a train to a distant station on one day and return the next.

05.08 Land and Water Vehicle Operation

Workers in this group drive large or small trucks, delivery vans, or locomotives, to move materials or deliver products. Some drive ambulances; others operate small boats. Most of these jobs are found with trucking companies, railroads and water transportation companies. Wholesale and retail companies hire delivery drivers; ambulance drivers are hired by hospitals, fire departments, and other establishments concerned with moving the sick or injured.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —drive a truck to pick up and deliver materials or products.
- —drive a bus or locomotive engine to designated stations within a garage or storage yard.
- —inspect a truck to see that it is loaded properly and in good running condition.
- —operate a locomotive engine for a freight train.
- —complete trip logs and other reports to show materials hauled and deliveries made.
- —obtain signed receipts from customers for freight delivered.
- —operate and maintain a motorboat to deliver passengers or supplies.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand traffic laws.
- —move eyes, hands, and feet together to control the movement of the vehicle.
- —use arithmetic to collect money, make change, and total receipts.
- —drive vehicle for long periods with few stops.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you read automotive, trucking, or railroad magazines regularly? Do you enjoy reading this type of material?
- —Have you driven in heavy traffic? Does it bother you to do so?

05.09 Material Control

Workers in this group receive, store, and/or ship materials and products. Some estimate and order the quantities and kinds of materials needed. Others regulate and control the flow of materials to places in the plant where they are to be used. Most have to keep records. Jobs are found in institutions, industrial plants, and Government agencies.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —weigh truck loaded with cotton and compute weight and gin charges.
- —count, sort, or weigh articles in a shipment to check accuracy of invoices or requisitions.
- —verify inventory records of a department store against the actual count of items.
- —fill out receiving tickets on incoming items or complete delivery tickets or outgoing items.
- —receive, store, and issue tools, dies, and equipment in a factory.
- —store and issue sports equipment for a professional athletic team.
- —check the progress of an order in a factory and write a report.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —use arithmetic to keep records, take inventory, estimate quantities, or schedule the flow of materials through the plant.
- —avoid errors in recordkeeping.
- —use hands and fingers to measure, handle, store, or move large and small items.
- —reach to place materials on shelves higher than your head.
- —see small print and figures in catalogs, on shipping tickets, and on invoices.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken industrial arts or vocational courses? Did you learn how to issue, store, and care for tools?
- —Have you been an equipment manager for a sports team? Were you responsible for issuing and maintaining the equipment?
- —Have you mailed or sent packages by freight? Can you compute freight or postal rates accurately?
- —Have you been a stock clerk in the military service? Did you enjoy this type of work?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from a short demonstration to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Evidence of basic reading, writing, and mathematics skills are usually required by employers. On-the-job training is provided to teach workers the procedures involved in each particular job. Complex tasks involving judgment or responsibility are assigned as workers become experienced.

Jobs involving tools and machines often require a knowledge of the use and care of such equipment. One year of shop experience is sometimes required.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many jobs in this group require workers to be on their feet most of the work day. Most of the work is done indoors. However, different working conditions are sometimes present on loading platforms, storage yards, or cold storage rooms.

Workers who move heavy objects have to use care to avoid body strain or injury.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

05.10 Crafts

Workers in this group use hands and handtools skillfully to fabricate, process, install, and/or repair materials, products, and/or structural parts. They follow established procedures and techniques. The jobs are not found in factories, but are in repair shops, garages, wholesale and retail stores, and hotels. Some are found on construction projects, and others with utilities, such as telephone and power systems.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —take apart household appliances to replace defective parts.
- —repair and adjust gas or electric appliances in homes.
- —install venetian blinds in commercial establishments.
- —repair and adjust radios and television sets.
- —plan, set, and shoot explosive charges in mining or oil well drilling.
- —operate equipment to regulate volume and quality of sound recordings in a motion picture studio.
- —repair, adjust, or replace parts in office machines.
- —prepare and cook soups, meats, vegetables, desserts, and other foods in a restaurant.
- —install mufflers on automobiles and trucks.
- —install air conditioning units in homes.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand and use blueprints, sketches, drawings, and other kinds of specifications.
- —use hands, arms, and fingers.
- —work to precise measurements.
- —visualize how finished product will look, or how a system operates.
- —use arithmetic to measure, compute amount of materials to use, and to inspect product to be sure it conforms to requirements.
- —lift and move materials and products.
- —climb and balance self.
- —work outdoors in all kinds of weather.
- —stay calm in face of emergency or danger.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you repaired things that were broken? Can you locate and fix the defective parts?
- —Have you cooked or baked? Can you measure and mix ingredients according to recipes?
- —Have you repaired or installed parts on an automobile? Can you work skillfully with handtools?
- —Have you taken courses in industrial arts or electronics? Can you understand repair instructions and schematic diagrams?
- —Have you had military experience involving repair of mechanical or electrical equipment?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from three months to over four years, depending upon the specific kind of work. The education and training required for jobs involving equipment repair varies according to the type of equipment. Some jobs only require on-the-job training. However, repairers of electronic equipment and business machines must have special training and experience. High schools and vocational schools offer courses in electricity, electronics, mathematics, or blueprint reading.

A few companies provide extensive training to prepare workers for some repair jobs. Correspondence courses in such fields as electricity and electronics are often helpful. Apprenticeships are available.

Many cooks begin as kitchen helpers to get the needed experience and on-the-job training. High school or post-high school training in food preparation is helpful. Training programs are also offered by the armed services, private schools, and some large hotels and restaurants. Apprenticeships are available. It takes several years of training and experience to become a head cook or chef in a large restaurant.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Working conditions for equipment repairers varies according to the type of equipment. Some jobs require repairs and adjustments to be made in the customer's office or home. Others require that repairs be made in a repair shop setting. Sometimes workers must work in narrow spaces and in uncomfortable positions. Dirt, dust, and grease sometimes create unpleasant conditions.

Working conditions for cooks depend upon the size of the establishment. Many kitchens are well-lighted, well-equipped, and properly ventilated. However, heavy lifting, oven and range heat, and long hours of standing and walking are common to these jobs.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

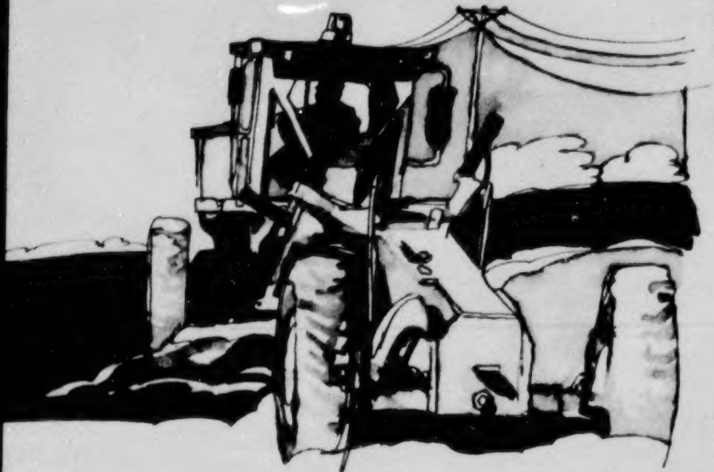
05.11 Equipment Operation

Workers in this group operate heavy machines and equipment to dig, drill, dredge, hoist, or move substances and materials. They also operate machines to pave roads. These jobs are found at mining, logging, and construction sites; docks; receiving and shipping areas of industrial plants; and large storage buildings and warehouses.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —set up and operate a horizontal earth-boring machine.
- —operate a long-wall mining machine in a coal mine.
- —operate a portable drilling rig to prospect for oil.
- —pump cement through a pipeline to a construction site.
- —drive an asphalt spreader on a highway construction site.
- —operate a bulldozer to grade a lawn for a new home.
- —operate a crane to hoist materials and equipment into place at a building construction site.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —operate equipment according to work orders, signals, and oral instructions.
- —withstand the jolting and vibration of heavy equipment.
- —work outdoors in all kinds of weather.
- —move eyes, hands, and feet together to control movement of equipment.
- —estimate distances.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you driven a car, motorcycle, or other motorized vehicle? Can you react quickly and safely to sudden dangerous situations?
- —Have you taken shop classes or had a home workshop where you operated machines? Do you enjoy this type of activity?
- —Have you operated a tractor on a farm?
- —Have you operated construction equipment in the armed forces?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Many workers learn to operate equipment by on-the-job training. However, the best way to prepare for these jobs is to complete a three-year apprenticeship. Apprentices are supervised by experienced workers. They progress from these simple tasks to mechanical operations, such as lifting light loads with a crane. They also receive classroom instruction, which may include engine operation and repair, cable splicing, hydraulics, welding, and safety.

To qualify for an apprenticeship program, workers must be U. S. citizens and have a high school or vocational school diploma, or its equal. Applicants must also pass a physical fitness examination.

Shorter training courses are offered by the manufacturers of heavy equipment and by the armed services. High school and vocational courses in driver eduation and automobile mechanics are especially helpful.

Workers with leadership abilities may advance to supervisors. Some workers start their own construction companies, equipment rental agencies, or equipment maintenance firms.

Some machine tenders are promoted from manual jobs within a company. Others with machine shop classes are hired immediately after high school graduation. Additional skills are learned on the job.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

For most jobs in this group, work hours and pay rates are dependent upon local union scales.

Machinery and equipment operators and drivers often work outside under noisy and dusty conditions. They must be alert in order to keep machines under control. Those who drive machines on public streets and roads must have state motor vehicle operator licenses. Work in the construction industry is seasonal in some regions of the country.

Some workers operate one type of equipment and change employers from project to project. People who can operate a variety of machines and equipment or who have special skills usually have more job opportunities. Training in operating new machinery may be provided by employers or through union programs.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

05.12 Elemental Work: Mechanical

Workers in this group perform a variety of unskilled tasks, such as moving materials, cleaning work areas, operating simple machines, or helping skilled workers. These job are found in a variety of non-factory settings.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —dump barrels of oil into tanks and take samples to the refinery.
- —position cables around logs in a logging camp and signal for winch to move them.
- —clean filters, tanks, and wallways at a sewage-disposal plant.
- —lubricate moving parts of vehicles such as automobiles, buses, and trucks.
- —use a shovel to remove excess dirt from a ditch or excavation.
- —use brooms, vacuums, and shovels to clean working areas in a factory.
- —carry brick and mortar to masons constructing a wall.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

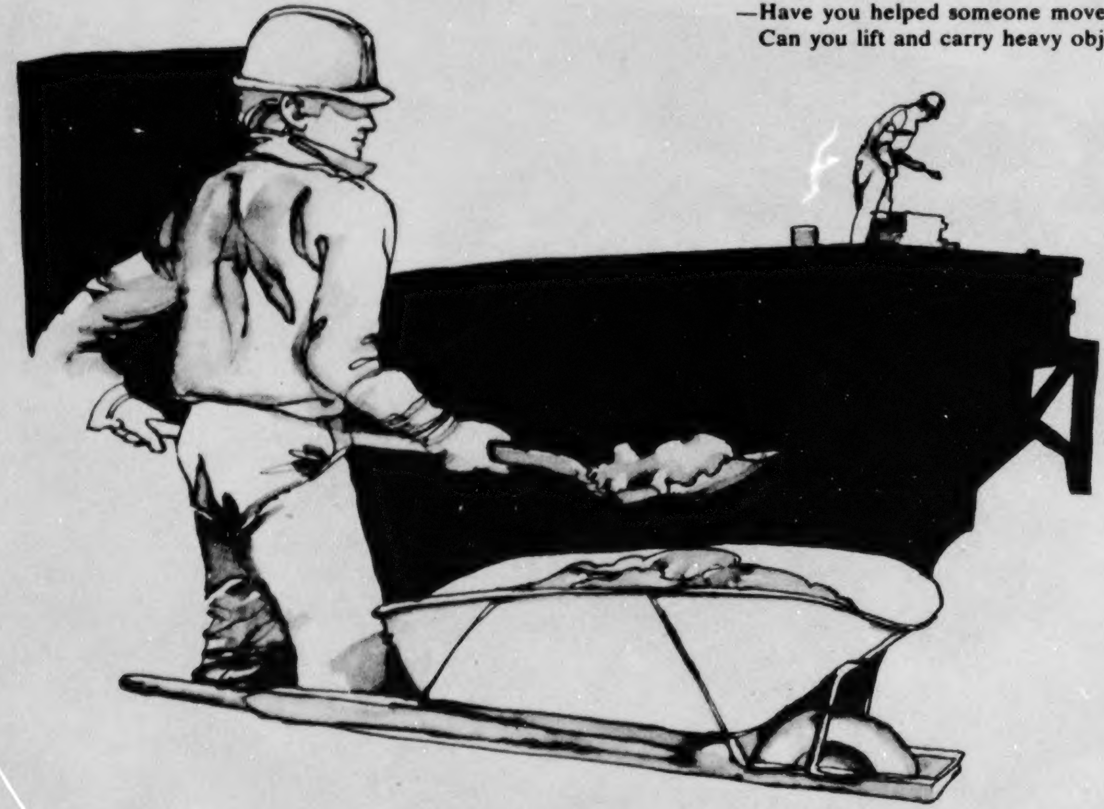
To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —use hands to lift, carry, or pull objects that may be heavy.
- —understand simple instructions.
- —work outdoors in all kinds of weather.
- —learn simple procedures and techniques.
- —perform routine work or the same task over and over again.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you done work of a physical nature? Do you like to do this type of work?
- —Have you been responsible for cleaning a house or garage? Do you take pride in maintaining an orderly work area?
- —Have you helped someone move household goods? Can you lift and carry heavy objects?



How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from a short demonstration to over three months, depending upon the specific kind of work. This kind of work requires only a brief explanation of job duties. The most important hiring consideration is usually the physical ability of the applicant. Many of these jobs are available through union hiring halls.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Weather conditions can cause periods of unemployment for construction workers. Others usually work a 40-hour week all year.

Workers are often required to wear safety clothing to protect themselves from common job hazards such as falling objects, extreme temperature levels, or exposure to dangerous chemicals. Employers often provide classes or on-the-job training about safety. Work locations are often checked by government inspectors to insure that conditions are safe.

With additional training, workers in this group may qualify for machine tending or operating jobs. Workers with a high school education or its equal may qualify for apprenticeship programs leading to more skilled jobs, especially in construction. Those with leadership ability can advance to supervisory jobs.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

Industrial

06

An interest in repetitive, concrete, organized activities in a factory setting. You can satisfy this interest by working in one of many industries that manufacture goods on a mass production basis. You may enjoy manual work--using your hands or handtools. Perhaps you prefer to operate or take care of machines. You may like to inspect, sort, count, or weigh products. Using your training and experience to set up machines or supervise other workers may appeal to you.

Industrial

06.01 Production Technology

06.02 Production Work

06.03 Quality Control

06.04 Elemental Work: Industrial

06.01 Production Technology

Workers in this group use their skill and knowledge of machines and processes to perform one or more demanding or complex activities. Some set up machines for others to operate or set up and perform a variety of machine operations on their own. Some do precision handwork; some supervise or instruct others in the use of machines, processes to be carried out, and the techniques to be used.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example you might —set up a textile weaving loom to produce specified patterns in cloth.

—use precision measuring devices to inspect watch parts to determine defects in the production process.
—set up a group of production machines and check them to insure they are operating correctly.
—supervise salvage operations in a factory.
—assemble precision optical instruments.
—inspect electronic systems by following blueprints and diagrams.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—read and understand blueprints and diagrams in order to set up and adjust machines and equipment.
—use eyes, hands, and fingers to do precision assembly work or to operate precision instruments.
—use math skills to plan schedules and keep production records.
—detect small differences in shape, size, and texture of products.
—explain how to operate a machine to other workers.
—direct and organize the work of others.
—inspect electronic systems by following blueprints and diagrams.
—pay strict attention to set standards and guidelines.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

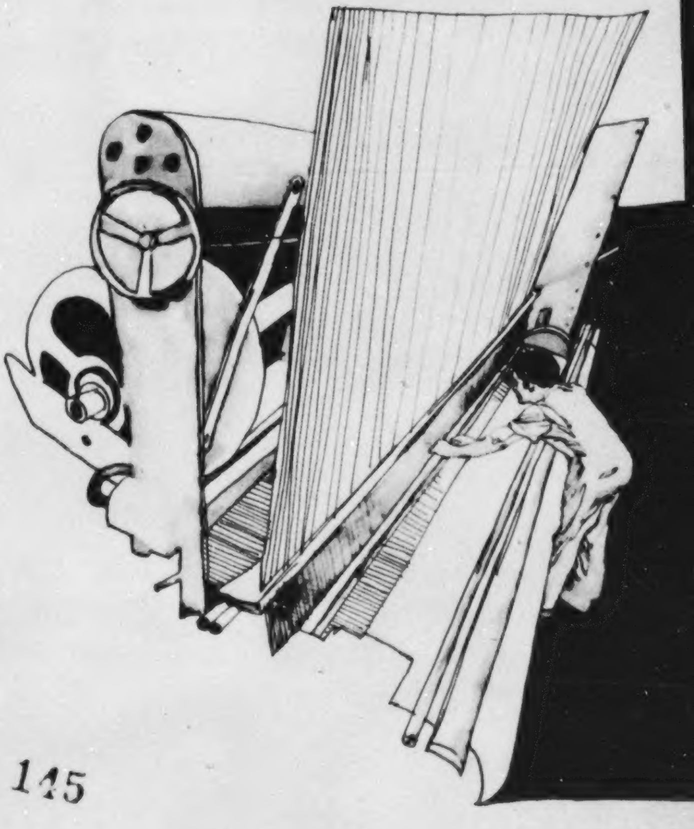
The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you taken industrial arts or machine shop courses? Do you like to set up machines according to written standards?
—Have you taken general or applied mathematics courses? Do you like projects which use math skills such as measuring?
—Have you assembled a bicycle or toy by following drawings or written instructions? Did you have a fairly easy time doing it?
—Have you held a summer or part-time job where mechanical equipment was used? Do you enjoy working in this type of surroundings?
—Have you been in charge of a group project? Do you like to assume the responsibility for getting a project completed?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Many of the jobs in this group require shop courses. Some may require math classes. Some jobs have formal apprenticeship programs. Others require on-the-job training.

Supervisory positions are usually filled by promoting workers with seniority and skill. Other jobs, such as inspecting, may be advancement positions for machine operators.



What else should you consider about these jobs?

Overtime or night and shift work may be required on some jobs. Some workers are paid hourly wages. Other workers are paid according to the number of pieces they produce.

Workers are exposed to different types of factory conditions. Most plants are well-lighted and ventilated. However, working around machinery may be hazardous or noisy, and safety procedures must be followed.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

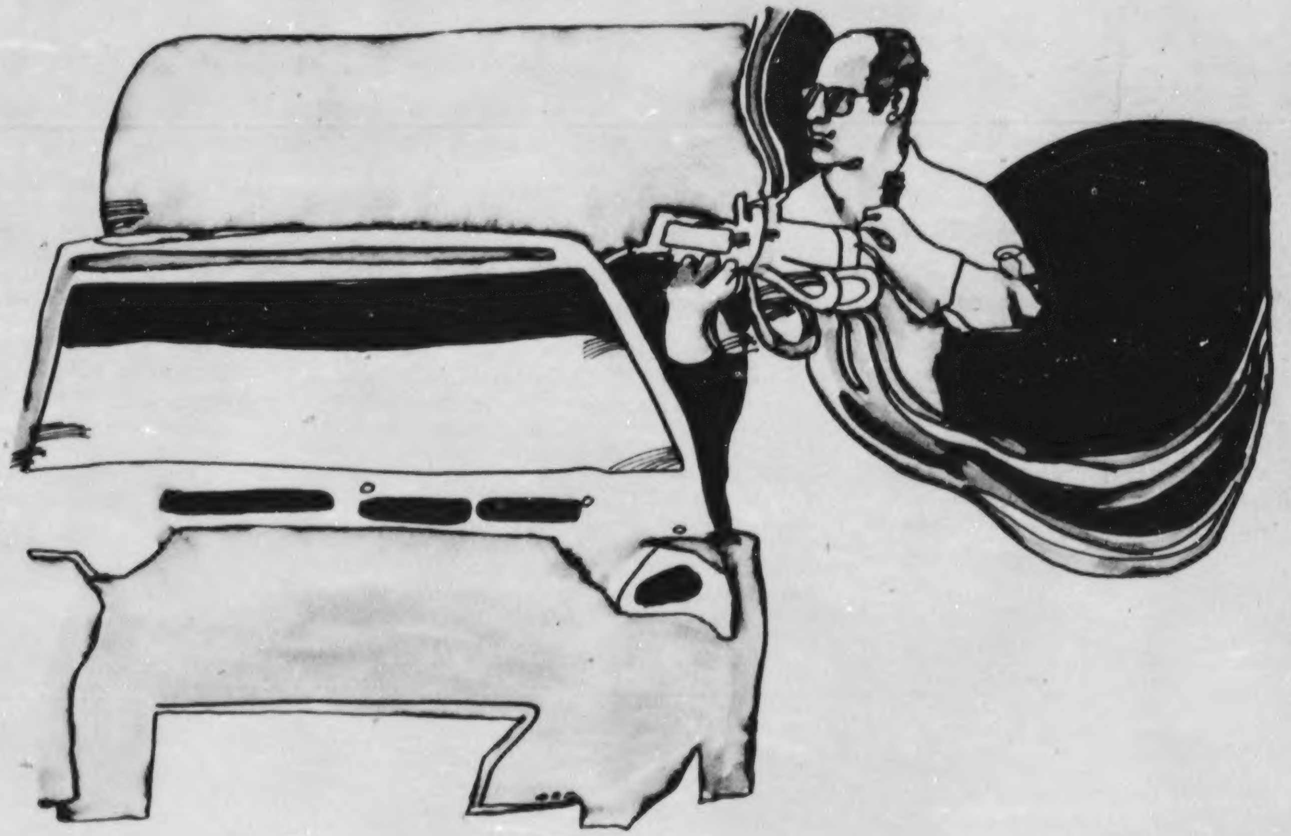
06.02 Production Work

Workers in this group perform skilled hand and/or machine work to make products in a factory setting.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —control vacuum pan boilers to crystallize liquid sugar.
- —set up and operate machines that make paper products.
- —thread nuts and bolts by operating a tapping machine.
- —tend a series of coating machines to make artificial leather or oilcloth.
- —split animal hides into layers by operating a machine which rolls and cuts leather to specified thicknesses.
- —determine amount of fabric to be used for garment patterns and supervise marking and cutting activities.
- —use power screw drivers to install automobile doors.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —read and follow instructions to set up and adjust machines and equipment.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers to adjust controls on machines, manipulate hand tools, or assemble products.
- —use math skills for measuring, computing, or recordkeeping.
- —detect differences in the shape, size, and texture of various items.
- —pay strict attention to set standards and guidelines.
- —direct the work of others.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken industrial arts or machine shop courses? Do you like to operate machines?
- —Have you taken general or applied mathematics courses? Do you like projects which use math skills such as measuring?
- —Have you assembled a bicycle or toy by following drawings or written instructions? Was it fairly easy for you to do?
- —Have you held a summer or part-time job where mechanical equipment was used? Do you enjoy working around mechanical equipment?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from three months to over four years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Machine shop courses are helpful for most jobs in this group. General or applied mathematics courses may also be helpful for some jobs. Apprenticeship programs are available for some jobs. However, most workers are trained on the job. Several jobs in this group can be attained by promotion from a helper's position.

Supervisory jobs are usually given to workers with seniority and skill.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group usually follow established work procedures and their activities seldom change from day to day.

Overtime or night and shift work may be required. Workers may advance to higher level jobs as supervisors and inspectors.

Workers are exposed to different types of factory conditions. Most plants are well-lighted and ventilated. However, working around machinery may be hazardous or noisy, and safety procedures must be followed.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

Blow-Molding-Machine Operator (fabric. plastics prod.) 556.682-010
Calender Operator, Four-Roll (fabric. plastics prod.; rubber goods; rubber tire & tube) 554.662-010
Compression-Molding-Machine Operator (fabric. plastics prod.) 556.682-014
Extruder Operator (fabric. plastics prod.; plastics mat.) 557.382-010
Injection-Molding-Machine Operator (fabric. plastics prod.) 556.382-014
Polystyrene-Bead Molder (fabric. plastics prod.) 556.382-018

Batch-and-Furnace Operator (glass mfg.) 572.382-010
Drawing-Kiln Operator (glass mfg.) 575.362-010
Forming-Machine Operator (glass mfg.) 575.382-014
Glass-Bulb-Machine Former, Tubular Stock (glass mfg.) 575.382-018
Glass-Ribbon-Machine Operator (glass mfg.) 575.362-014
Glass-Ribbon-Machine-Operator Assistant (glass mfg.) 575.365-010
Glass-Rolling-Machine Operator (glass mfg.) 575.382-022
Yardage-Control Operator, Forming (glass mfg.) 575.662-014
Fiberglass-Machine Operator (glass prod.) 574.682-010

Ager Operator (plastics mat.) 553.482-010
Coagulation Operator (plastics mat.) 559.582-010
Cracking-Unit Operator (plastics mat.) 558.682-010
Drier Operator (plastics mat.) I 559.562-010
Film-Casting Operator (plastics mat.) 559.682-022
Finishing-Area Operator (plastics mat.) 559.362-014
Hydraulic-Strainer Operator (plastics mat.) 551.582-010
Kettle Operator (plastics mat.) 558.382-042
Naphtha-Washing-System Operator (plastics mat.) 559.382-038
Operator, Catalyst Concentration (plastics mat.) 550.382-026
Plastics-Spreading-Machine Operator (plastics mat.) 554.382-014
Polymerization-Kettle Operator (plastics mat.) 558.382-050
Ripening-Room Attendant (plastics mat.; synthetic fibers) 559.682-038
Roll Operator (plastics mat.) 554.682-018
Rubber-Mill Operator (plastics mat.) 559.682-042
Shredding-Floor-Equipment Operator (plastics mat.) 559.382-050
Solutions Operator (plastics mat.) 550.382-034

Arch-Cushion-Press Operator (rubber goods) 556.362-010
Belt-Press Operator (rubber goods) I 553.362-010
Calender-Let-Off Operator (rubber goods; rubber tire & tube) 554.682-010
Calender Operator (rubber goods; rubber tire & tube) 554.362-010
Curer, Foam Rubber (rubber goods) 553.682-014
Frothing-Machine Operator (rubber goods) 550.362-010
Latex-Ribbon-Machine Operator (rubber goods) 559.682-034
Pulverizer-Mill Operator (rubber goods; rubber reclaim.) 555.382-010

Sponge-Press Operator (rubber goods) 559.682-050
V-Belt Curer (rubber goods) 553.682-026

06.02.14 Equipment Operation, Paper and Paper Products Processing

Coating-Machine Operator, Hardboard (build. board; paper goods) 534.682-022
Digester Operator (build. board; paper & pulp) 532.362-010
Fourdrinier-Machine Tender (build. board; paper & pulp) 539.362-014
Pulp Grinder and Blender (build. board) 530.682-010

Air-Drier-Machine Operator (paper & pulp) 534.682-010
Back Tender, Paper Machine (paper & pulp) 534.662-010
Black-Ash-Burner Operator (paper & pulp) 553.682-010
Bleacher, Pulp (paper & pulp) 533.362-010
Bleach-Liquor Maker (paper & pulp) 550.662-010
Coating-Machine Operator (paper & pulp; wallpaper) 534.682-018
Decker Operator (paper & pulp) 533.682-010
Molding-Machine Tender (paper & pulp) 539.685-018
Pulper, Synthetic Soil Blocks (paper & pulp) 530.582-010
Pulp-Refiner Operator (paper & pulp) 530.382-010
Wood Grinder Operator (paper & pulp) 530.662-014

Creping-Machine Operator (paper goods) 534.682-030
Impregnation Operator (paper goods) 539.685-014
Waxing-Machine Operator (paper goods) 534.482-010

Paper-Coating-Machine Operator (photo. apparatus) 534.582-010

06.02.15 Equipment Operation, Food Processing

Tobacco Curer (agric.) 523.682-038

Baker (bake. prod.) 526.381-010
Baker Apprentice (bake. prod.) 526.381-014
Batter Scaler (bake. prod.) 526.682-010
Cracker-and-Cooky-Machine Operator (bake. prod.) 520.482-010
Depositing-Machine Operator (bake. prod.) 524.682-010
Dough Mixer (bake. prod.) 520.582-010
Dough-Mixer Operator (bake. prod.) 520.462-010
Doughnut-Machine Operator (bake. prod.) 526.682-022
Enrobing-Machine Operator (bake. prod.; confection.) 524.382-014
Oven Operator, Automatic (bake. prod.; cereal) 526.682-030

Dethistler Operator (can. & preserv.) 521.685-106
Drier Operator (can. & preserv.; dairy prod.) 523.682-022
Evaporator Operator (can. & preserv.; dairy prod.; sugar) 521.382-010
Retort Operator (can. & preserv.) 526.682-034
Shrimp-Peeling-Machine Operator (can. & preserv.) 521.682-038
Steam-Oven Operator (can. & preserv.) 526.382-026

Drum Drier (cereal) 523.682-026
Extruder Operator (cereal) 520.682-018
Flake Miller, Wheat and Oats (cereal) 521.682-022
Gunner (cereal) 523.382-010
Percolator Operator (cereal) 523.682-034

Reduction-Furnace Operator (chem.) 553.682-022

Centrifuge Operator (chew. gum) 529.682-010
Coating-Machine Operator (chew. gum; confection.) 524.382-010
Confectionery Cooker (chew. gum; confection.) 526.382-014
Gum-Scoring-Machine Operator (chew. gum) 520.682-022

Chocolate-Production-Machine Operator (choc. & cocoa) 529.382-014
Chocolate Temperer (choc. & cocoa; confection.) 523.682-010
Cocoa-Bean Roaster (choc. & cocoa) I 523.362-010
Cocoa-Press Operator (choc. & cocoa) 521.682-014
Conche Operator (choc. & cocoa) 526.382-010
Drier Operator (choc. & cocoa) 529.682-022
Refining-Machine Operator (choc. & cocoa) 521.682-034
Sirup Maker (choc. & cocoa) 529.482-022

Center-Machine Operator (confection.) 520.682-014
Cutting-Machine Operator (confection.) 521.685-102
Depositing-Machine Operator (confection.) 529.682-018
Lozenge Maker (confection.) 529.682-026
Molding-Machine Operator (confection.) 520.682-026

Bone-Char Kiln Operator (corn prod.) 523.662-010
Centrifugal Operator (corn prod.; sugar) 521.682-010
Converter Operator (corn prod.) 526.382-018
Dextrine Mixer (corn prod.) 523.682-018
Dry-Starch Operator (corn prod.) 520.362-014
Dry-Starch Operator, Automatic (corn prod.) 529.362-014
Filter Operator (corn prod.) 521.682-018
Flash-Drier Operator (corn prod.) 529.582-014
Miller, Wet Process (corn prod.) 521.662-010
Molasses and Caramel Operator (corn prod.) 526.382-022
Refinery Operator (corn prod.) 521.362-018
Refinery Operator, Assistant (corn prod.) 521.462-010
Separator Operator (corn prod.) 521.382-014
Sirup Mixer (corn prod.) 529.462-010
Starchmaker (corn prod.) 520.485-030

Buttermaker (dairy prod.) 529.362-010
Buttermaker, Continuous Churn (dairy prod.) 529.382-010
Cheesemaker Helper (dairy prod.) 529.682-014
Cottage-Cheese Maker (dairy prod.) 522.382-010
Dairy-Processing-Equipment Operator (dairy prod.) 529.382-018
Freezer Operator (dairy prod.) 529.482-010
Icicle-Machine Operator (dairy prod.) 920.482-010
Novelty Maker (dairy prod.) I 529.482-014
Novelty Maker (dairy prod.) II 529.482-018
Wort Extractor (dairy prod.) 526.485-010

Cistern-Room Operator (distilled liquors) 520.382-010
Fermentation Operator (distilled liquors) 522.382-014
Liquor Blender (distilled liquors) 522.382-018
Mash-Tub-Cooker Operator (distilled liquors) 522.382-022
Miller, Distillery (distilled liquors) 521.362-014
Still Operator (distilled liquors) 522.382-026
Yeast Distiller (distilled liquors) 522.362-010

Cook, Sirup Maker (flav. ext. & sirup) 526.682-018
Sirup Maker (flav. ext. & sirup) 520.485-026

Coffee Roaster (food prep., n.e.c.) 523.682-014

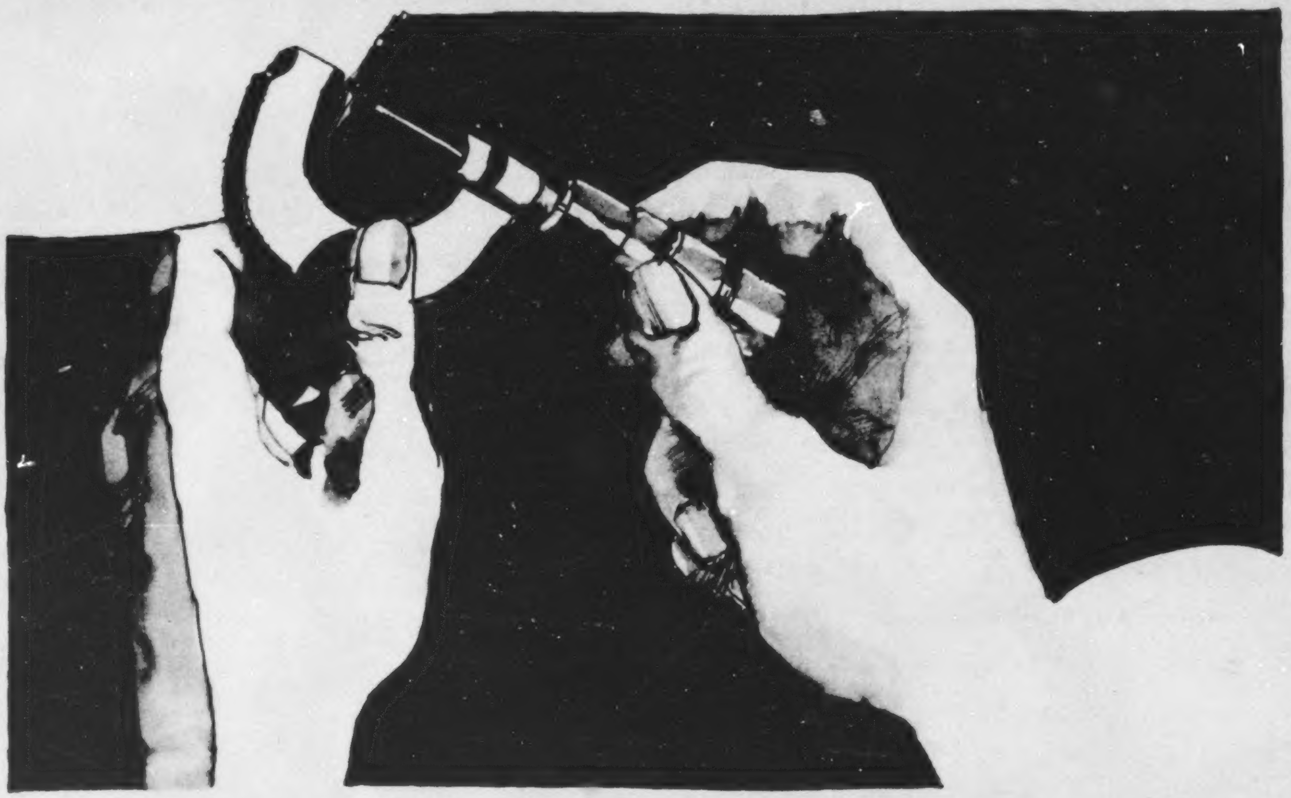
06.03 Quality Control

Workers in this group check the quality and quantity of products and materials being manufactured. They inspect, test, weigh, sort, and grade specific items to be sure that they meet certain standards. Some may also keep inspection records of the number or kind of defects and flaws they find. They work in factories and other large plants that process materials and manufacture products.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —examine unground optical lenses for flaws and sort them according to defects.
- —inspect watch dials and hands for flaws and proper alignment.
- —inspect the dimensions of fountain pen nibs by using measuring instruments such as calipers.
- —examine rejected rubber footwear and sort according to whether pairs should be salvaged or scrapped.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- — do the same thing over and over according to a set procedure.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers to handle gauges and measuring tools.
- —use math skills to count, measure, or keep inspection records.
- —make decisions based on standards that can be measured or checked.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you had industrial arts or machine shop courses? Did you learn how to use measuring devices such as gages, calipers, and micrometers?
- —Have you sorted paper, metal, or glass for recycling? Were you able to tell the difference between similar types of materials?
- —Have you had general or applied mathematics courses? Do you like to keep tallies or other simple records?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over one year, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most jobs in this group have no specific educational requirements. However vocational shop courses are helpful.

Employers usually train workers through on-the-job training programs.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Overtime or night and shift work may be required. Many of these jobs are available to persons without any training. After gaining skill and experience in these jobs, workers often move up to better paying jobs.

Workers are exposed to different types of factory conditions. However, these jobs usually do not require working near machinery.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

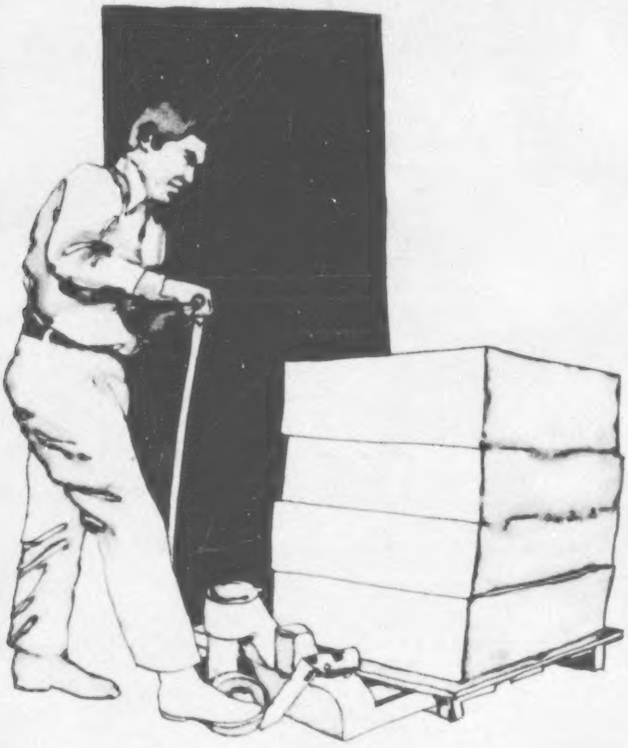
06.04 Elemental Work: Industrial

Workers in this group feed, off bear, or tend machines and equipment, or do manual work. They perform routine, uncomplicated work that requires little training or experience. They also assist other, more skilled workers. They work in a factory setting.



What kind of work would you do in these jobs?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —use a handtruck to move supplies to workers on an assembly line.
- —smooth wooden furniture posts using sandpaper and steel wool.
- —tend a machine that seals paper cartons.
- —carry containers and materials and wash mixing vats to assist sirup-mixer in making table sirup.
- —tend machine that cuts continuous strips of zipper into certain lengths.
- —clean and polish plated products with a cloth and liquid cleanser.
- —tend a machine that rivets metal furniture parts together.
- —sort and bag scrap leather to salvage useable pieces.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —follow instructions carefully.
- —adjust to doing the same thing over and over.
- —move or lift heavy objects.
- —pay attention to safety rules when working around machinery.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken an industrial arts course? Would you like to work in an industrial setting?
- —Have you helped a worker install, repair, or build something in your home? Can you follow directions?
- —Have you helped a custodian at school or church?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over three months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most jobs in this group do not require specific training before employment. Brief on-the-job training is often provided at the time of employment or as work assignments are changed. Industrial arts or shop courses provide useful background for jobs in this group.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many people accept jobs in this group as their first full-time employment. As they develop experience and skills, they may advance to other jobs in the work setting.

Work activities change very little from day to day because workers must follow set procedures. It is important that workers follow strict safety rules when working around machines.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

07.02 Mathematical Detail

Workers in this group use clerical and math skills to gather, organize, compute, and record, with or without machines, the numerical information used in business or in financial transactions. Jobs in this group are found wherever numerical record- keeping is important. Banks, finance companies, accounting firms, or the payroll and inventory control departments in business and government are typical of places where this work is done.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —use a calculator to compute wages for payroll records.
- —compute the cost of labor and materials for production records of a factory.
- —compute freight charges and prepare bills for a truck company.
- —compute or verify credit card data to keep customer accounts.
- —supervise statistical clerks or insurance underwriting clerks.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —compute and record numbers correctly.
- —follow procedures for keeping records.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers at the same time to enter figures in books and forms, or to operate a calculating machine.
- —perform work that is routine and detailed.
- —read and copy large amounts of numbers without error.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you had courses in arithmetic or business math? Are you accurate?
- —Have you taken bookkeeping or accounting? Do you like working with numbers?
- —Have you balanced a checking account or figured interest rates? Do you spot errors quickly?
- —Have you had experience working with numbers while in the armed forces? Do you like routine work of this kind?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. People with basic math skills can enter many of the jobs in this group. They receive on-the-job training for specific tasks. To enter some jobs, training in bookkeeping or other business subjects is required. Business training is offered by high schools and business schools.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in small offices may do a variety of tasks. Some may keep all records for a business or agency. Usually, experience is needed for such positions.

In large offices, workers may have only certain tasks to do, and may repeat these tasks every day. Most jobs of this nature are entry jobs requiring little or no experience.

07.03 Financial Detail

Workers in this group use basic math skills as they deal with the public. Keeping records, answering customers' questions, and supervising others is often part of the job. Jobs in this group are found where money is paid to or received from the public. Banks, grocery check-out counters, and ticket booths are typical places of employment.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —receive money from customers and compute payments and interest for a loan company.
- —operate a cash register, receive cash, and make change in a grocery store.
- —cash winning tickets at a race track.
- —record bids for items and collect deposits at an auction.
- —keep records of the money you receive and pay out in a bank.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —use math to figure the cost of things and make change.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers at the same time to operate an adding machine, calculator, or cash register.
- —deal with the public with tact and courtesy.
- —perform work that is routine and organized.
- —make decisions based on information that can be checked or verified.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you balanced a checking account? Did your balance agree with the bank statement?
- —Have you used a calculator or adding machine? Do you like operating this type of equipment?
- —Have you sold tickets, candy, or other items? Can you make change rapidly and accurately?
- —Have you been the treasurer of a club or social group? Did your records balance at the end of your term in office?
- —Have you worked as a cashier in a military PX? Do you like working with the public?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Basic math skills are required for most of the jobs in this group. Workers usually receive on-the-job training for specific tasks. A few jobs may require experience or more formal business training. This training is offered by high schools, business schools, and government training programs. Jobs with the federal government usually require a civil service examination.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers who handle money may have to be bonded to protect the employer against dishonest activities. At the end of their shift, workers must make sure that their cash on hand balances with their records. Sometimes this may mean working after the firm or company closes to the public.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

What kind of work would you do?

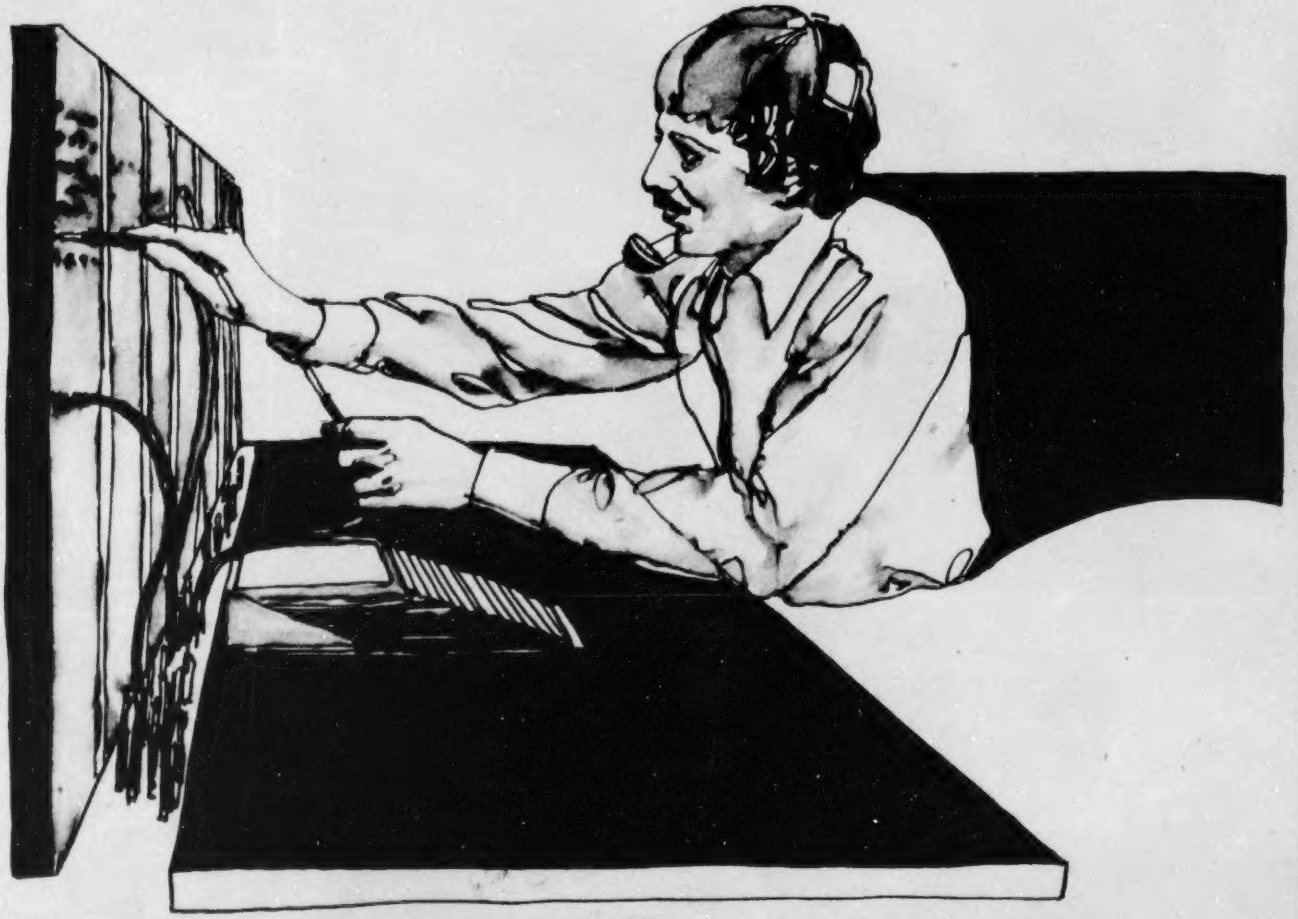
Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —interview people and compile information for a survey or census.
- —give information to bus or train travelers.
- —operate a telephone switchboard.
- —register hotel guests and assign rooms.
- —prepare reports and insurance-claim forms for customers.
- —receive callers at an office and direct them to the proper area.
- —use a radio to receive trouble calls and dispatch repairers.
- —register park visitors and explain rules and hazards.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —speak clearly and listen carefully.
- —use personal judgment and specialized knowledge to give information to people orally.
- —communicate well with many different kinds of people.
- —change easily and frequently from one activity to another, such as from typing, to interviewing, to searching in a directory, to using a telephone or a radio transmitter.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers accurately while operating a switchboard or computer keyboard.



How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you participated in a school or community survey? Do you enjoy meeting and interviewing people?
- —Have you given directions to others for finding your home? Were they able to follow your directions?
- —Have you had speech courses? Do you have a clear speaking voice? Do you use good grammar?
- —Have you operated a CB radio? Do you like to use the equipment?
- —Have you been involved in a communications unit of the armed forces? Would you like to continue doing this type of work?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over four years, depending upon the specific kind of work. People with a good speaking vocabulary and who like contact with the public usually enter these jobs. Some jobs require typing or general clerical skills. On-the-job training ranging from one month to two years is usually provided. Many employers prefer workers with a high school education or its equal. Chances for promotion are improved with additional education and training. Jobs in the federal government usually require a civil service examination.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Often the worker may have to ask for information that is considered personal or confidential. People may have an unfavorable attitude about giving this information.

Workers may be assigned a wide range of duties, depending on the size of their company.

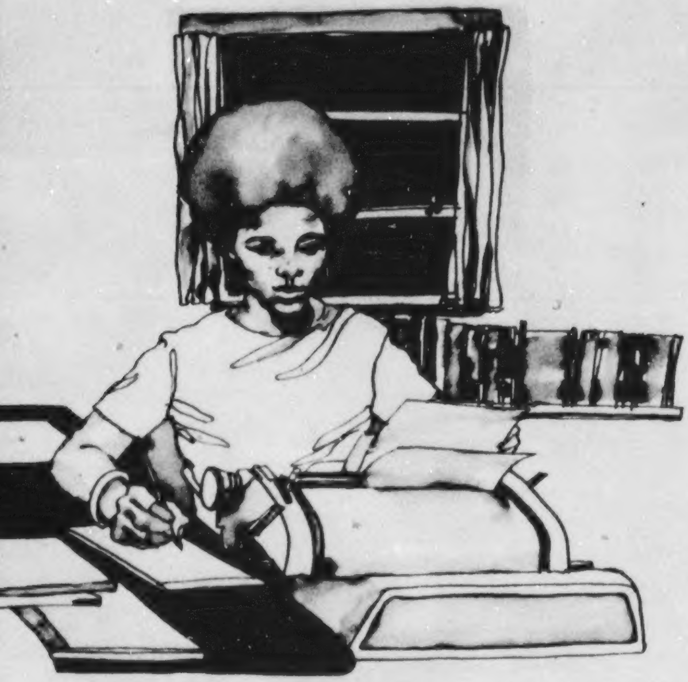
07.06 Clerical Machine Operation

Workers in this group use business machines to record or process data. They operate machines that type, print, sort, compute, send, or receive information. Their jobs are found in businesses, industries, government agencies, or wherever large amounts of data are processed, sent, or received.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- type letters, forms, lists, and other materials.
- operate a special typewriter which automatically adjusts margins to prepare copy for reproduction.
- operate checkwriting machine to imprint checks.
- monitor and control a computer terminal to process data according to instructions.
- operate a telegraphic typewriter to send and receive messages.
- operate a keypunch machine to transcribe data onto punch cards or magnetic tape.
- operate billing machine to prepare bills, statements, and invoices.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- use eyes, hands, and fingers to operate keyboard of a clerical machine quickly and accurately.
- perform repetitive tasks.
- follow set or routine procedures.
- work with speed and accuracy.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you taken courses in typing? Were your speed test scores average or above? Do you enjoy typing?
- Have you had a part-time job in an office setting? Do you enjoy work that follows a set routine?
- Have you used a calculator or adding machine regularly? Can you use these machines rapidly and accurately?
- Have you had clerical work experience in the armed forces?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from three months to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most employers require an applicant to have a high school education or its equal. Spelling and grammar are important to prepare for jobs in this group. Basic arithmetic skills are required for some jobs.

Some employers provide machine instruction and on-the-job training. However, graduation from a business school can be an advantage. The ability to operate several office machines improves chances for employment. Specialized training on a particular machine is required for certain jobs.

Supervisory positions are usually assigned to experienced workers who have leadership ability.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some workers operate one machine all day. They may report malfunctions or make minor repairs. Large company offices usually have enough work to keep machines operating constantly. In small firms, however, machine operators may also do a variety of other clerical tasks.

Workers in supervisory jobs should enjoy dealing with people because they often train new workers, interview job applicants, and assign workers to jobs.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

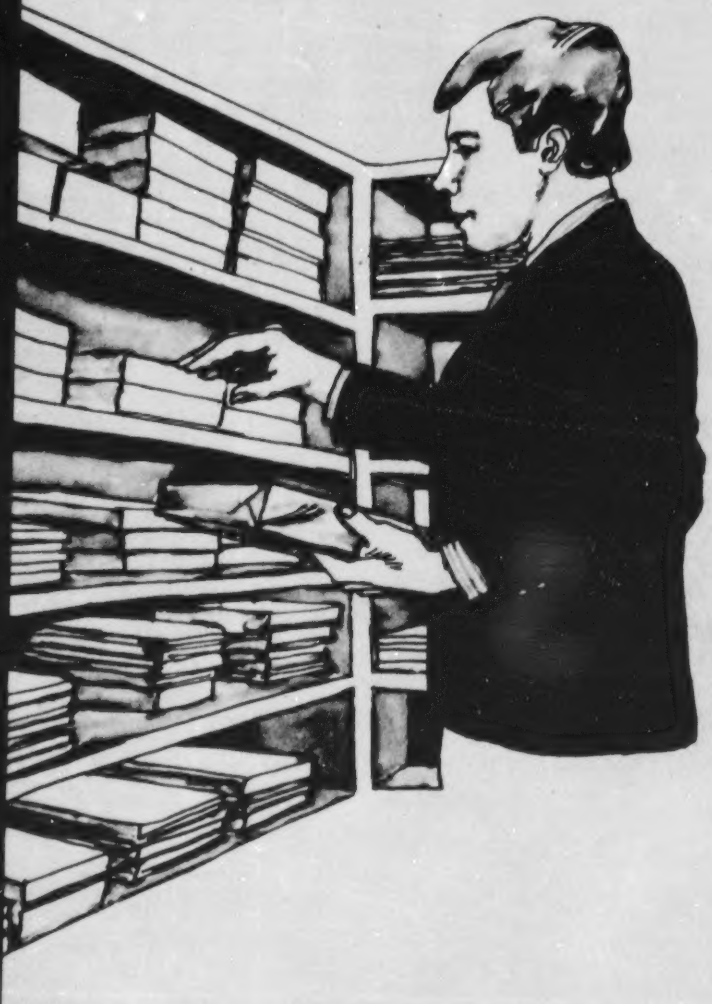
07.07 Clerical Handling

Workers in this group perform clerical duties that require little special training or skill. Workers routinely file, sort, copy, route, or deliver things like letters, packages, or messages. Most large businesses, industries, and government agencies employ these workers.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —wrap, inspect, weigh, and affix postage to packages and record COD and insurance information.
- —pick up and deliver messages in an office or office building.
- —put printed pages together in sequence.
- —keep office workers supplied with pencils, paper, and other materials.



What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —perform clerical tasks that do not require special skills.
- —follow directions.
- —perform work that is routine.
- —read or copy information correctly.
- —work well with others.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you kept attendance records for a class or club? Do you enjoy this type of work?
- —Have you helped to address and stamp newsletters?
- —Have you maintained a checkbook for yourself or a club? Can you copy and compute numbers accurately?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over three months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Basic arithmetic and English skills are required for many of these jobs. On-the-job training is provided by most employers. However, high school commercial or business courses are helpful in getting beginning jobs. Workers entering federal government jobs usually are required to take civil service examinations.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Both full- and part-time jobs are usually available for workers in this group. There are often opportunities for advancement or transfer, both within a company or to other employers.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

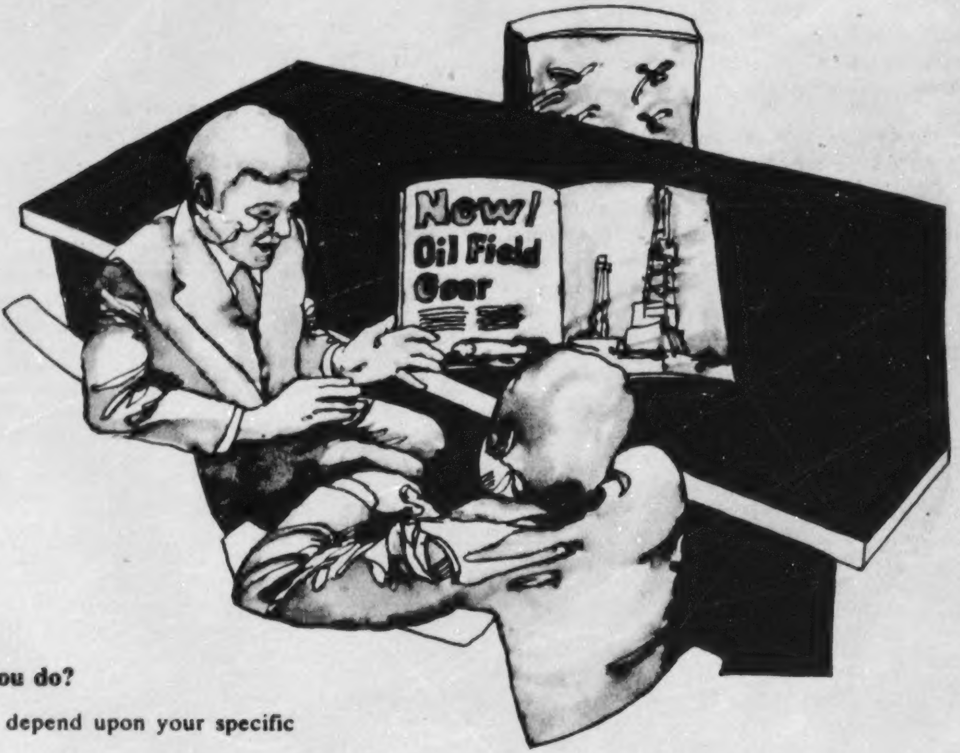
08.02 General Sales

08.03 Vending

08.01 Sales Technology

Workers in this group sell products such as industrial machinery, data processing equipment, and pharmaceuticals; services such as industrial shipping, insurance, and advertising. They advise customers of the capabilities, uses, and other important features of these products and services, and help them choose those best suited to their needs. They work for manufacturers, wholesalers, and insurance, financial, and business service institutions. Also included in this group are workers who buy products, materials, securities and properties for resale. Some work for themselves.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —call on oil companies to sell them oilfield equipment.
- —call on businesses to sell them radio and television time.
- —call on businesses to sell them computers.
- —advise people about the type and amount of insurance they should buy.
- —buy clothing and accessories for stocking a department store.
- —sell professional supplies and equipment to dentists, doctors, or engineers.
- —buy the grain harvest from farmers for resale to processing plants.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand the principles of electronics, chemistry, economics, or communications, as they relate to the products you sell or buy.
- —organize your own activities to make the best use of your time and effort.
- —express yourself well when talking to potential buyers or sellers, to discuss features of the products or services involved and convince the other person of both your knowledge and integrity.
- —use arithmetic in computing the mark-up on merchandise, cost of installing equipment or machinery in a plant, or quoting special rates for varying amounts of materials purchased.
- —maintain enthusiasm and interest throughout all conferences with buyers or sellers.
- —keep accurate records of contacts, sales, and purchases.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken business or sales related courses? Did you like the courses?
- —Have you attended auctions? Can you estimate, in advance, the selling prices of the items?
- —Have you bought items to sell? Did you make a profit on your sales? Do you enjoy doing this type of activity?
- —Have you made speeches or been in debates? Do you enjoy presenting ideas to people?
- —Have you worked as a salesperson in a store? Do you enjoy sales work?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from six months to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. A common way to prepare is to obtain a two- or four-year degree with a major in business administration, marketing, or a similar field. For jobs involving technical sales, a degree in a field such as engineering, chemistry, or physics is helpful. Sometimes workers in other sales groups advance after obtaining related work experience.

Most employers give new employees formal and informal training. This training may last up to one year. Workers learn the policies, procedures, and details involved.

Jobs in real estate or insurance may require a state or local license. Workers usually must take a written test to obtain these licenses.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Most of these jobs require meeting new pople. Some jobs involve frequent travel. Many workers are under pressure as they make decisions which affect sales or investments involving large sums of money.

Some workers receive a salary, others work on a commission. A commission is usually a percent of the selling price of an item. Sometimes a worker may receive a combination of salary and commission. Some workers in this group own their own businesses.

08.02 General Sales

Workers in this group sell, demonstrate, and solicit orders for products and services of many kinds. They are employed by retail and wholesale firms, manufacturers and distributors, business services, and non-profit organizations. Some spend all their time in a single location, such as a department store or automobile agency. Others call on businesses or individuals to sell products or services, or follow up on earlier sales.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might
- —demonstrate and sell radios and television sets in a department store.
- —sell hardware supplies to stock stores.
- —help customers find what they want in a jewelry store.
- —sell pets and pet supplies in a pet store.
- —call people on the telephone to sell them products.
- —arrange and conduct demonstration parties in people's homes.
- —drive a truck on a set route and sell products to people at their homes.
- —call on people in their homes to sell pest control services.
- —train or supervise workers in a sales department and keep records of merchandise on hand.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:
- —understand and explain company policies about such things as deferred payment plans, financing charges, returned goods privileges, or service guarantees.
- —use arithmetic to total costs of purchase, make change, compute percentages, fill out order and sales forms, and draw up time purchase contracts.
- —treat customers with courtesy and respect, even in difficult situations.
- —talk easily and persuasively to other people, using language that they'll understand.
- —help customers to make up their minds about purchases by suggesting appropriate products.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.
- —Have you had courses in sales, bookkeeping, or business math? Did you like these courses? Do you have an ability to work with numbers?
- —Have you sold items door-to-door? Have you collected money or items for a charity? Do you like to meet people this way?
- —Have you given oral reports in front of a group? Do you express your ideas easily to strangers?
- —Have you worked in a military PX or cafeteria? Do you enjoy selling items to people?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from three months to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most employers require applicants to have a high school education or its equal. Courses in selling or retailing are helpful. Many high schools, junior colleges, and community colleges offer courses and programs in this field. Some schools provide work-study programs in which students work part-time as well as attend classes. Selling experience during vacations is also helpful in preparing for this kind of work.

Employers usually provide on-the-job training to teach new workers about the company policies and the products or services to be sold. These training programs may last from one week to three months. Some workers are required to have extra skills such as driving a truck or playing a musical instrument. Other workers are required to make minor repairs or adjustments on equipment they sell.

Some jobs in this group are supervisory or management positions to which workers with sales experience may be promoted.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Many retail sales jobs require workers to vary working hours. Some businesses are open to the public on Sundays, holidays, or evenings. Selling is usually done at the customer's convenience.

Some workers are paid by the hour. Others are paid according to how much they sell. However, some workers receive earnings from a combination of these ways.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

Workers in this group sell novelties, snacks and other inexpensive items. They work at stadiums and street fairs, in night clubs or restaurants or wherever crowds gather for entertainment or recreation. Some of them sell products on the street, staying in one location, or moving through commercial and residential areas.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —walk around a football stadium or baseball park calling out items to be sold.
- —walk among guests in a nightclub, restaurant, or hotel selling cigars, cigarettes, or corsages.
- —sell snacks to passengers on train.
- —take pictures of people in restaurants and try to sell them the finished prints.
- —sell merchandise such as flowers, fruit, or ice cream from a pushcart or truck.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —speak clearly, shout, sing, or call out to attract customers.
- —accept payment and make change quickly and accurately.
- —stand or walk for long periods of time, often climbing stairs or pushing through crowds while carrying heavy containers or pushing a cart.
- —be very persuasive in getting people to buy your products.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you worked at a carnival or fair? Do you enjoy shouting or gesturing to get the attention of a crowd?

- —Have you sold things to raise money for a school or civic project? Do you enjoy this type of activity?
- —Have you sold magazines or candy door-to-door? Do you like work in which you persuade others to buy products?
- —Have you worked as a cashier in a store? Can you figure the cost of several items and make change accurately?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over three months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most jobs in this group are open to almost anyone. Formal training, experience, or education is seldom required.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Jobs in this group are usually short-term and opportunities for advancement are few. In many cases, payment is based only on how many items are sold, so workers must use all possible means to convince customers to buy. However, some jobs provide permanent employment. These jobs provide experience that can be applied to other saleswork. Some jobs in this group require the worker to be outside in all kinds of weather. Some workers own their own carts and are in business for themselves.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

09.02 Barber and Beauty Services

Workers in this group provide people with a variety of barbering and beauty services. These services involve care of the hair, skin, and nails. These workers find employment in barber and beauty shops, department stores, hotel, and retirement homes. A few workers find jobs on passenger ships. Some are self-employed and work in their own homes or go to the customer.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —cut, trim, shampoo, curl, or style hair.

—lather and shave facial hair.
—remove unwanted facial hair by using an electrically-charged needle.
—give hair and scalp-conditioning treatments.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—understand written and diagram instructions for applying hair coloring and permanent waving solutions.
—adapt a procedure to an individual customer's physical features.
—use a variety of tools, such as scissors, tweezers, combs, curlers, and hair blowers.
—add and subtract to mix solutions in proper proportions.
—see differences in shapes, widths, and lengths of lines when cutting hair and shaping eyebrows.
—deal pleasantly with all kinds of people.
—use hands and fingers skillfully to wrap hair around rollers.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you cut someone's hair? Do you style your own hair? Do you like to try new and different hairstyles?
—Have you read health and beauty magazines? Can you recognize various skin tones or hair textures?
—Have you applied theatrical make-up? Do you enjoy changing the appearance of others?
—Have you worked at a health spa or athletic club? Do you enjoy helping others?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from six months to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Both public and private vocational schools offer courses in cosmetology and barbering. In a few areas, apprenticeships in cosmetology are available. Manufacturers of barbering and cosmetology equipment and materials offer training courses about the use of their products.

Formal training requirements vary according to the occupation and state. Studies usually include anatomy, bacteriology, dermatology, and physiology. Techniques such as hair cutting, permanent waving, electrolysis, and hair and scalp analysis are also included.

Students of cosmetology or barbering schools get supervised practical experience. Trainees and workers develop further expertise by attending and participating in seminars and contests sponsored by schools, trade associations, and manufacturers.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers may be required to furnish and wear uniforms. Irregular hours may be required, including evening and weekends. Standing for varying lengths of time is typical of this work but it is not a requirement.

Many workers use stools with rolling casters to move around the customer's chair. Changing hair styles and the development of new products and techniques make it necessary for workers to attend training and demonstration classes frequently.

Workers usually are paid on the basis of how many customers they serve. They rarely receive a straight salary. Most employers set the prices for the services offered and the worker receives a part of these prices. The amount the worker is paid may vary and may depend on the supplies and tools provided by the employer. For example, some employers provide the needed towels, shampoo, or lotions and keep a larger share of the money collected. Workers may or may not be allowed to accept tips. They may be expected to join a union and pay membership dues.

09.03 Passenger Services

Workers in this group drive buses, taxis, limousines or other vehicles to transport people. Workers who teach driving are also included in this group. Taxi, bus, and street railway companies hire most of the workers in this group but they can also find employment with government agencies.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- drive a taxi and pick up customers who signal and assist them with baggage.
- drive a bus on a regular route in a city.
- give directions and other information to passengers of your bus or taxi.
- record taxi fares and destinations in a log.
- drive a bus from city to city.
- enforce safety rules when loading or unloading your passengers.
- work as a chauffeur for an individual or company.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- follow written and oral instructions and use time schedules, meters, and traffic regulations.
- think, reason, and act quickly to cope with traffic situations.
- read maps to locate addresses and select the best routes.
- memorize routes and established passenger pick-up locations.
- speak clearly to give information to passengers.
- deal courteously with all kinds of people.

- judge distances and speeds to avoid accidents.
- move eyes, hands and feet easily and together to brake, steer, and use other vehicle controls, such as directional signals and windshield wipers.
- read street and traffic signs at a distance and identify colors of traffic lights.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you completed a driver's education course? Do you have a driver's or chauffeur's license?
- Have you driven a vehicle in heavy traffic? Did you stay calm?
- Have you driven in a bicycle rodeo, car rally, or other vehicle obstacle course? Did you receive a good score?
- Have you driven a church or school bus? Can you drive a vehicle loaded with passengers without being distracted?
- Have you had military experience driving a motor vehicle?

3. How can you prepare for and enter this type of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over six months, depending upon the specific kind of work. Many employers want workers with a high school education or its equal. The U.S. Department of Transportation requires intercity bus drivers to be able to communicate with passengers and prepare reports. These drivers must meet specific physical requirements. They must take a written test on motor vehicle regulations. They must pass a test in the type of bus they will drive. Many intercity bus lines want workers with driving experience. Most of these firms have their own training programs for new drivers.

Local bus drivers are usually required to have a chauffeur's license. Many employers require applicants to take a written test. Workers also need to be of normal adult height and weight and have good eyesight and health. They are usually required to have one or two years of experience driving a large vehicle. Most local transit companies hold training courses and behind-the-wheel sessions. Each state has special rules for drivers of school buses. These rules are set by the State Department of Education.

Taxi drivers also must have a chauffeur's license. They are required to have a special taxi operator's license issued by the local police department, state safety department, or the public utilities commission. Most large cities require an applicant for a taxi driver's license to pass a written test on traffic laws and street locations. Some cities also require workers to have a good driving record and no criminal history. Workers often need an eighth grade education or its equal to complete the required forms.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in these jobs may have to work nights and weekends or report for work on short notice. Heavy traffic and long trips can cause nervous tension in drivers. Steering and controlling the larger vehicles will require free shoulder movements and more strength than is used in driving private passenger automobiles.

Chances for promotion in these jobs are limited. However, experienced drivers may be assigned preferred routes or may get more pay. A few drivers may become dispatchers or terminal managers. Some taxi drivers buy and drive their own cabs.

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from short demonstration to over three months, depending upon the specific kind of work. People can learn most of the jobs in this group after being hired. However, some restaurants hire only persons with experience. Workers may get the training and experience they need by starting in a related job. For example, a person may start as a dining room attendant and become a waiter or waitress. Some schools offer classes in food service work.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Night and holiday work, changing work hours, and weekend work are often required. Uniforms may be required, especially for food service work.

Income for these workers is often a combination of wages and tips. Some jobs in this group require the worker to adapt to specific demands. For example, a newspaper carrier may have to be out very early in the morning regardless of weather. An attendant at a lodging facility may have to live on the premises.

09.05 Attendant Services

Workers in this group perform services that make life easier and more pleasant for people. They do things that people can't or don't want to do for themselves, like opening doors, delivering messages, carrying luggage and packages, and dishing up food. They find employment in a variety of settings, such as hotels, airports, golf courses, theaters, reducing salons, and gymnasiums.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —serve or assist diners at a buffet table.
- —carry food to a serving table in a cafeteria.
- —carry and deliver messages.
- —care for costumes of a theatrical or movie cast.
- —carry pails of drinking water to farm or construction workers.
- —serve food to cafeteria customers.
- —check credentials of those entering a press box and run errands.
- —retrieve bats and foul balls from baseball field and supply balls to the umpire.
- —massage a customer's muscles to relieve tension.
- —clean, shape, and polish fingernails.
- —take tickets from persons attending a theater.
- —carry baggage on and off trains.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —carry out specific oral or written instructions, frequently following a simple routine.
- —do the same task over and over, frequently in the same way.
- —get along with all kinds of people.
- —stand and walk for long periods of time.
- —lift and carry things like luggage, trays of dishes, and bags of golf clubs.
- —use hands and fingers skillfully and easily when performing tasks, like giving rub-downs, manicuring fingernails, opening oysters, and bagging groceries.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you collected tickets or ushered at a play? Do you remain courteous when other people are rude to you?
- —Have you served food or beverages in a cafeteria line? Can you walk or stand for long periods of time?

10.01 Social Services

Workers in this group help people deal with their problems. They may work with one person at a time or with groups of people. Workers sometimes specialize in problems that are personal, social, vocational, physical, educational, or spiritual in nature. Schools, rehabilitation centers, mental health clinics, guidance centers, and churches employ these workers. Jobs are also found in public and private welfare and employment services, juvenile courts, and vocational rehabilitation programs.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —observe and interview members of a family to determine their medical or psychological needs.

—help prison parolees find jobs and adjust to society.
—counsel persons about educational and vocational plans.
—promote physical healing or spiritual well-being through prayer or other religious activities.
—help individuals overcome emotional or social problems.
—assist parents with child-rearing problems.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—use logical thinking and special training to counsel others or to help a person define and solve personal problems.
—care about people, their needs, and their welfare enough to want to help in some way.
—understand the way government programs and social service organizations function.
—gain the trust and confidence of people.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you been active in church or civic groups? Do you like to work with other people toward a common goal?
—Have your friends come to you for advice or help with their personal problems? Did you help them find solutions?

- Have you had courses in psychology, sociology, or other social sciences? Do you like to study human behavior?
- Have you helped to teach someone who had a problem learning something? Are you patient and willing to stay with a task until it is finished?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. More than four years of college study is required for most jobs in this group. Two or more years of graduate level study is often required for jobs in social work or psychology. Some jobs in religion, clinical psychology, or industrial psychology require additional education. School counselors are usually required to have one or more years of teaching experience.

Some workers begin as helpers in social, religious, or welfare organizations and receive on-the-job training. However, formal training is usualy required for a worker to become a professional.

Private organizations dealing with problems such as drug addiction and abortion sometimes hire people who can relate to these problems.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group sometimes receive community recognition or personal satisfaction from helping others. These jobs may involve irregular working hours and often include weekends and evenings. The work may involve dealing with sensitive people and confidential information.

Knowledge and skills must be updated frequently through reading journals, or attending seminars, summer schools, and workshops.

Workers in this group care for, treat, or train people to improve their physical and emotional well being. Most workers in this group deal with sick, injured, or handicapped people. Some workers are involved in health education and sickness prevention. Hospitals, nursing homes, and rehabilitation centers hire workers in this group, as do schools, industrial plants, doctors' offices, and private homes. Some sports also have a need for workers in this group.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —provide general nursing care to patients in a hospital.
- —give medications to patients as prescribed.
- —care for and treat patients in a doctor's office.
- —observe, record, and report information about the condition of patients in a hospital or clinic.
- —plan and carry out a school health program.
- —plan, organize, and direct music or art activities to help patients in a mental hospital.
- —direct and aid patients in physical therapy exercises.
- —provide physical therapy exercises and treatments as directed by a physician.
- —train newly blinded people in daily routines, such as grooming, dressing, and using the telephone.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

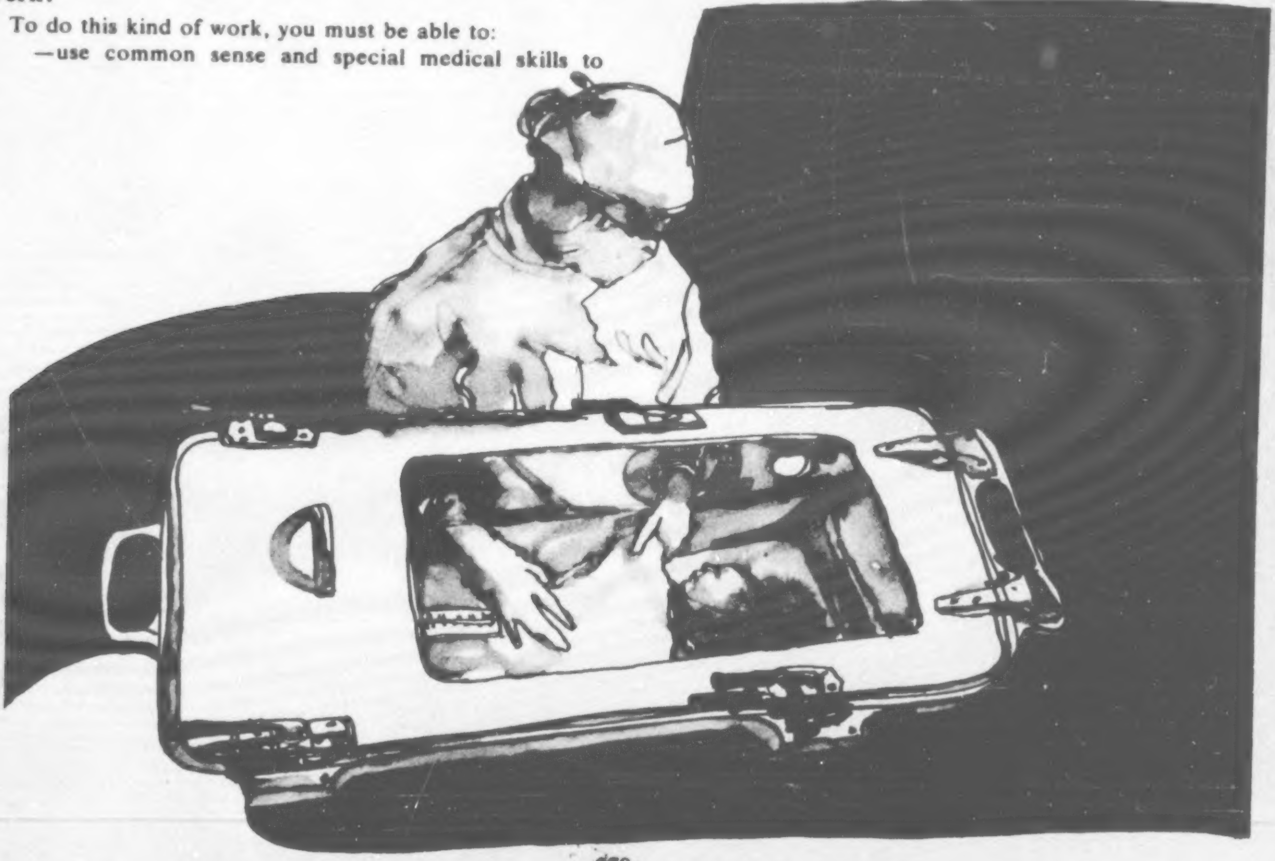
To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —use common sense and special medical skills to care for or treat sick or handicapped people.
- —understand technical information you might get from supervisors, charts, reference books, manuals, or labels.
- —use eyes, hands, and fingers with skill.
- —work fast in an emergency.
- —communicate with people when they are sick, handicapped, or nervous.
- —change from one duty to another frequently.
- —follow instructions exactly.
- —record information accurately.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.



- —Have you worked as an aide in a hospital, day care center, nursing home, or other institution? Do you like helping people who are ill or injured?
- —Have you had training or school courses in arts, crafts, speech, or music? Can you teach these skills to others?
- —Have you assembled a plastic model of a human body? Are you interested in human anatomy?
- —Have you taken a first aid course? Do you remember actions you should take in an emergency?
- —Have you taken courses which require you to dissect an animal? Can you skillfully handle small instruments such as tweezers or probes?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. People seeking entry into professional nursing and rehabilitation are required to have specialized training. Most schools of professional nursing require a high school education or its equal for admission. A few schools require some college credits for admission.

Most nursing schools offer one or more of the following programs: two-year associate degrees, three-year diploma programs, or four-year baccalaureate degrees. Studies in all programs include biological, physical, and social sciences as well as nursing theory and practice. Two and three year programs prepare graduates for general and private duty nursing. Graduates of four-year baccalaureate programs qualify for general duty nursing, positions in public health agencies, or advancement to supervisory and administrative work.

Jobs in therapy usually require a college degree in a specialized field such as speech, music, recreation, art, or physical education. On-the-job training is also required. People with degrees in other fields may become qualified by taking the necessary academic and clinical courses.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

These jobs involve close physical contact with people. Workers may have to lift, bathe, groom, or massage patients. They may also take blood or apply dressings and medications. Conditions associated with mental, emotional, or physical problems must be tolerated.

Most professionals will work a 40-hour week. However they may be on call or required to work overtime. Workers with seniority usually can be selective about the days and shifts they work.

Jobs may involve direct patient care, research, teaching, or combinations of each. There are many areas of specialization in this field.

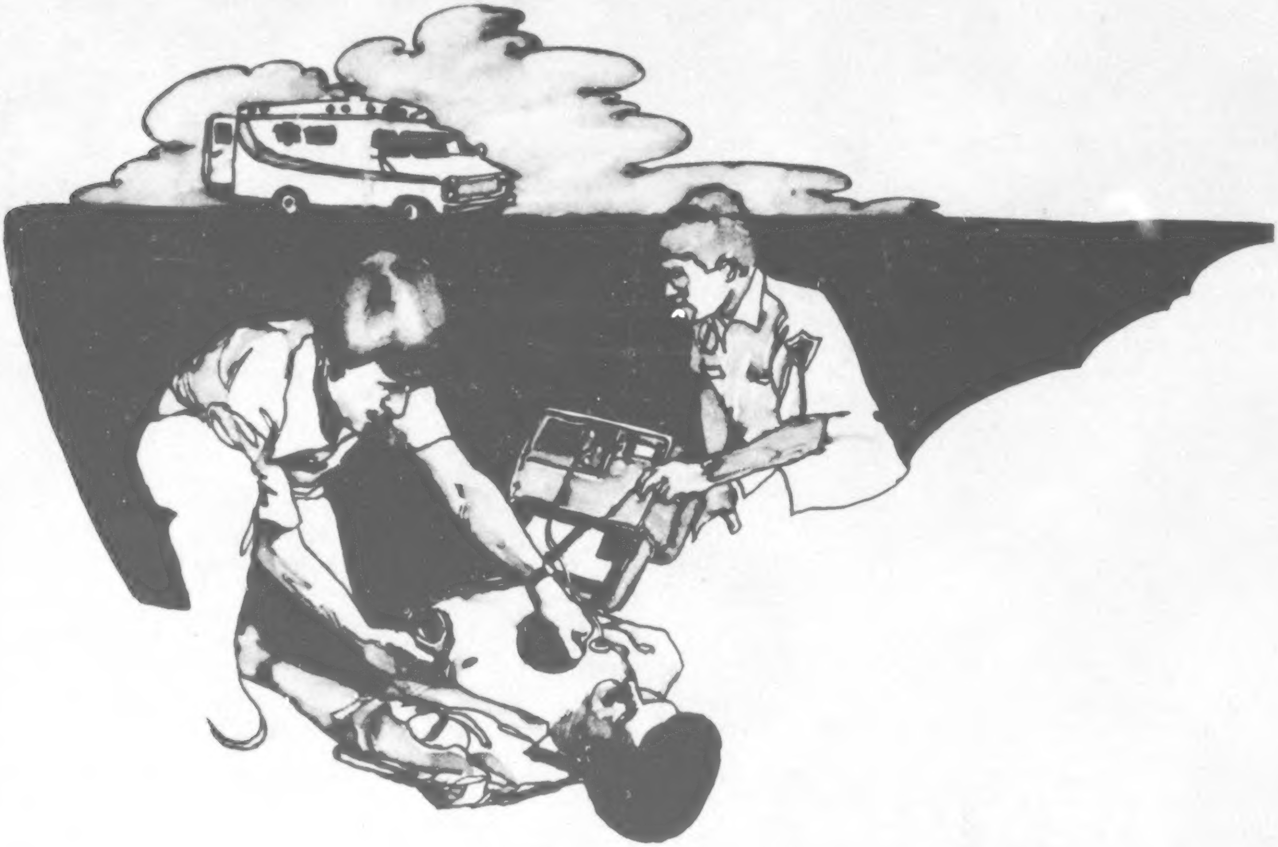
10.03 Child and Adult Care

Workers in this group are concerned with the physical needs and the welfare of others. They assist professionals in treating the sick or injured. They care for the elderly, the very young, or the handicapped. Frequently these workers help people do the things they cannot do for themselves. Jobs are found in hospitals, clinics, day care centers, nurseries, schools, private homes, and centers for helping the handicapped.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might
- —help elderly persons bathe, feed, or dress themselves.
- —collect medical data, using electronic equipment such as an electrocardiograph.
- —assist physical therapists in providing treatment to patients.
- —give emergency first aid in a commercial or industrial setting.
- —ride in an ambulance and assist the driver in giving first aid and transporting patients.
- —entertain and supervise children in a nursery.
- —assist a dentist by recording information about patients and doing other simple office and clinical tasks.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:
- —want to help people.
- —deal with the young, elderly, sick, or handicapped.
- —understand and follow instructions exactly in caring for those who depend on you.
- —use arms, eyes, hands, and fingers with skill.
- —talk and relate to sick or handicapped people.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you cared for children or sick people? Are you patient with and able to relate to those who cannot take care of themselves?
- —Have you had courses in first aid? Can you react quickly and calmly in an emergency?
- —Have you been a volunteer worker in a hospital? Do you like this kind of work?
- —Have you participated in community services or charity work? Are you concerned for the welfare of others?
- —Did you serve in the medical corps in the armed services?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from thirty days to over two years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Employers usually require an applicant to have a high school education or its equal. Hospitals, community agencies, colleges, and public vocational schools offer training courses for many of these jobs. The average program requires about one year to complete. Some jobs in this group require state licenses.

Hospitals and clinics provide on-the-job training for many of these jobs. This training usually includes classroom instruction, demonstration of skills and techniques and practice. The length of training depends upon the job.

Interest and experience in homemaking, child care, or adult care provide good background for working with the aged, blind, or the very young.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some of these jobs involve close physical contact with people. Workers may have to help lift, bathe, groom, or feed people. Working hours will vary, since health care is given 24 hours a day. The growing demand for health care gives workers in this group security.

The demand for both full- and part-time workers in this area is high. Qualified and experienced workers usually find the jobs that fit their needs.

Personal satisfaction is often received by helping others.

11.01 Mathematics and Statistics

Workers in this group use advanced math and statistics to solve problems and conduct research. They analyze and interpret numerical data for planning and decisionmaking. Some of these workers may first study and then determine how computers may best be used to solve problems or process information. Colleges, large businesses and industries, research organizations, and government agencies use these workers.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- apply formulas and mathematical principles to solve technical problems in engineering or the physical sciences.
- develop systems for handling information for businesses and industries.
- design insurance and pension plans and set premiums and benefit rates.
- plan and write computer programs for control of automated operations.
- convert business problems into numbers and symbols for electronic data processing.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- use advanced logic and scientific thinking to solve a variety of complex problems.
- understand and use advanced math and statistics.
- use personal judgment, and known facts to make decisions and deal with problems.
- use computer technology to solve problems or process large amounts of information.
- speak and write clearly and accurately.
- use technical terms, math and computer symbols, and complex charts and graphs.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- Have you had courses in advanced mathematics? Do you enjoy working with complex numerical ideas?
- Have you had experience using a pocket calculator? Can you enter long columns of numbers accurately? Can you use all of the mathematical functions on the machine?
- Do you like to solve written problems in mathematics? Can you easily identify the procedures for solving such problems?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Almost all jobs in this group require four or more years of study in mathematics and statistics at the college level. Experience in banking, accounting, or a related field is an additional requirement for some jobs. Other jobs require experience and training in a scientific or technical area.

Jobs with the federal government require a civil service examination.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group are expected to keep up with developments and trends in their specific areas. They attend seminars and workshops, or study for advanced degrees.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.02 Educational and Library Services

Workers in this group do general and specialized teaching, vocational training, advising in agriculture and home economics, and library work of various kinds. Jobs are found in schools, colleges, libraries, and other educational facilities.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —teach elementary or secondary school students.
- —teach the skills for a specific trade to adults or youth.
- —present ideas and information for effective home and farm management to adults.
- —teach undergraduate or graduate college courses.
- —check out, collect, and shelve books in a library.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand and use the basic principles of effective teaching.
- —develop special skills and knowledge in one or more academic or vocational subjects.
- —use an organized system for storing and using books and other library materials.
- —develop a good teacher-student relationship.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you been a camp or playground instructor? Do you enjoy working with children?
- —Have you helped friends or relatives with their homework? Can you explain things and communicate ideas?
- —Have you been a member of FTA (Future Teachers of America) or a similar group? Do you have a desire to teach or train others?
- —Have you been a school office worker or teacher's helper? Do you enjoy helping and assisting people?
- —Have you assisted a librarian in cataloging or shelving books? Did you like this type of activity?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Four or more years of college is required for most jobs in this group. College and university teachers, supervisors, and librarians must have graduate degrees. Teachers in public schools must obtain state certificates. Requirements for certificates vary among the states, but specific amounts of education and experience are usually included. Vocational teachers are often required to have extensive work experience in their teaching field. Home economics and agricultural extension services workers need special coursework.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Openings for teachers vary according to the subject area or specialty, the enrollment, and the financial support of each institution. Most teachers are required to work only nine months each year. Therefore, some may have time to further their education or find summer employment.

Teachers and other education workers are frequently required to accept duties outside of the regular work day. These duties may include planning and grading activities; attending conferences, meetings, and workshops; advising students; or supervising student activities. Workers may receive additional pay for some of these duties.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.03 Social Research

Workers in this group gather, study, and analyze information about individuals, specific groups, or entire societies. They conduct research, both historical and current, into all aspects of human behavior, including abnormal behavior, language, work, politics, lifestyle, and cultural expression. They are employed by museums, school and colleges, government agencies, and private research foundations.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —collect and analyze data about jobs, including worker qualifications and characteristics.
- —study articles from a historic site to learn about an ancient society.
- —conduct research about the mental development of people.
- —determine the origins, meanings, and pronunciations of words and define them for a dictionary.
- —appraise, assemble, and direct the safekeeping of historic documents.
- —conduct research in psychological problems related to engineering projects.
- —study the structure of language to understand its social function.
- —collect and interpret data on economic conditions.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

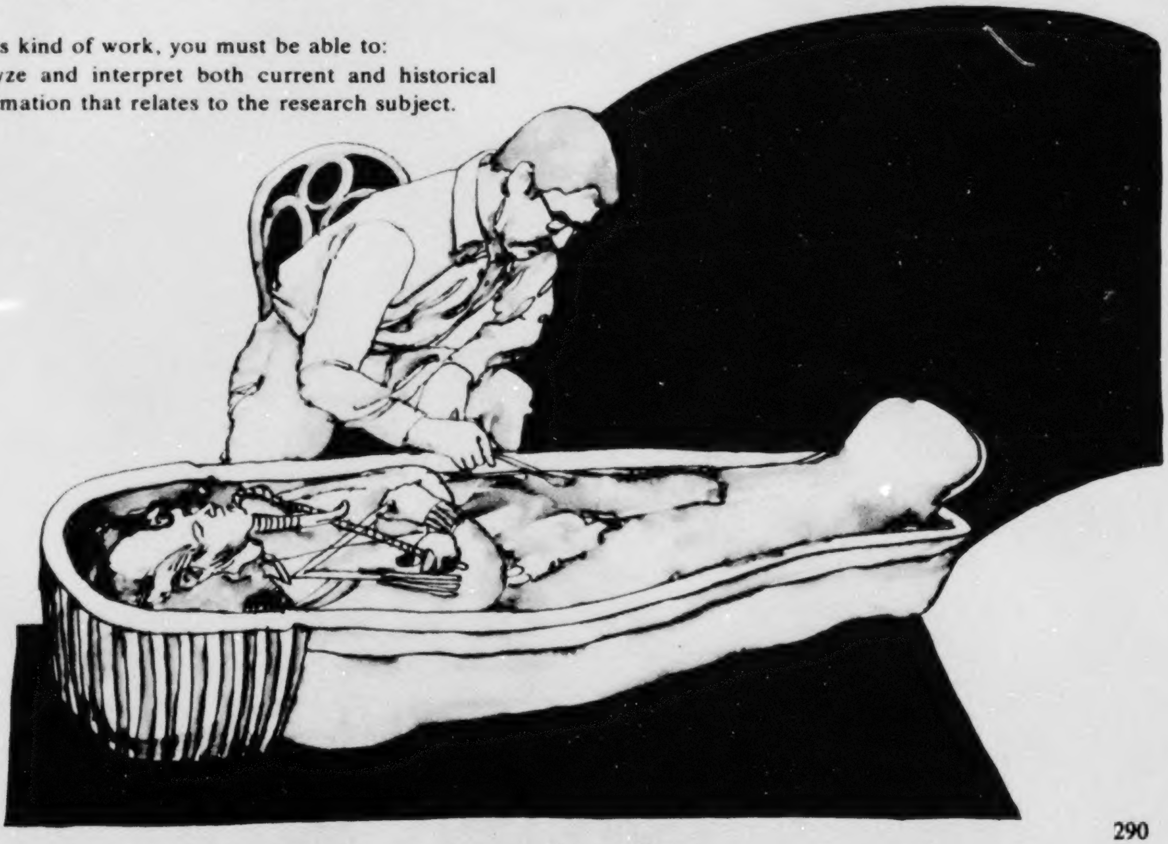
To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —analyze and interpret both current and historical information that relates to the research subject.
- —understand and use the theories and methods of research in your particular field.
- —organize detailed research notes into a logical outline.
- —write reports of findings.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you read magazines concerning world affairs and social problems? Do you keep informed of current events?
- —Have you done research projects or surveys for social science classes? Do you enjoy this type of activity?



—Have you taken courses in sociology, psychology, or civics? Do you like to write reports or research papers?
—Have you visited museums or historical sites? Do you enjoy history?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Almost all jobs in this group require four or more years of college study in the social sciences. Some jobs require specialization in a particular field such as sociology, history, economics, or archeology. Courses in computer science and statistics are important because these technologies are used to handle research data.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Employers expect workers in this group to keep up with developments and trends in their specific area. This is done by attending seminars and workshops or studying for advanced degrees.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.04 Law

Workers in this group advise and represent others in legal matters. Those in small towns and cities conduct criminal or civil cases in court, draw up wills and other legal papers, abstract real estate, and perform related activities. Those in large cities usually specialize in one kind of law, such as criminal, civil, tax, labor, or patent. They work in law firms, unions, government agencies, and commercial and industrial establishments. Some are self-employed and have their own office. Lawyers are frequently elected to public office, particularly as legislators. Many State Governors and U. S. Presidents have been lawyers.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —study court decisions and conduct investigations on claims filed against insurance companies.
- —prepare wills, deeds, and other legal documents for people.
- —preside in a court of law or at a formal hearing.
- —conduct research in technical literature to recommend approval or rejection of patent applications.
- —represent union or management in labor negotiations.
- —defend people during prosecution under the law.
- —represent clients who are suing or being sued for money or legal action.
- —give advice concerning federal, state, local, and foreign taxes.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand, interpret, and apply legal procedures, principles, and laws.
- —define problems, collect information, establish facts, and draw valid conclusions.
- —deal with all kinds of clients, juries, judges, and other lawyers in a manner that will influence their opinions, attitudes, and judgments.
- —read carefully and listen carefully to identify important details which could help a client win his case.
- —use your judgment about how to conduct a case or deal with a problem.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about ourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you taken debate or speech courses? Do you feel at ease presenting a point of view in front of a group?
- —Have you taken courses in journalism or composition? Can you communicate complex ideas effectively?

—Have you watched detective or lawyer television programs? Do you understand the legal terminology used?

—Have you attended a trial or court proceeding? Would you like to work in this type of atmosphere?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Lawyers are required to pass a bar examination and obtain a license for the particular state in which they want to practice. Educational requirements for taking the bar examination vary. Some states require proof of graduation from an approved law school. A four year college degree and completion of a program for law clerks may be accepted. Other states allow persons who study law with a licensed lawyer to take the bar examination. Correspondence courses in law are accepted as preparation for bar examinations in some states. Special requirements and licenses are necessary for those who wish to practice law in certain higher courts.

Entry requirements for law schools vary according to the institution. Some accept students directly from high school. Others require college graduation.

Some jobs in this group require legal education, but not a license. In these jobs, workers need legal knowledge, but do not practice law.

Licensed lawyers enter the field as junior partners in law firms, junior executives in business or industry, or workers in government agencies. A few establish their own law practices. However, self-employment is usually delayed because of the need for money, experience, and reputation. Some jobs in this group are elected or appointed positions.

Lawyers sometimes work long or irregular hours. They may be required to respond to emergency calls from clients. While the ability to see will make the study and practice of law easier, it is not required. There are many successful blind workers in this field.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

The field of law is highly competitive, but salaried positions can be found in government agencies, private businesses, and in some law offices. Lawyers in private practice depend on collection of fees for their income. When they have several long-term retainers (fees paid in advance so that service is available when needed), they have a stable income.

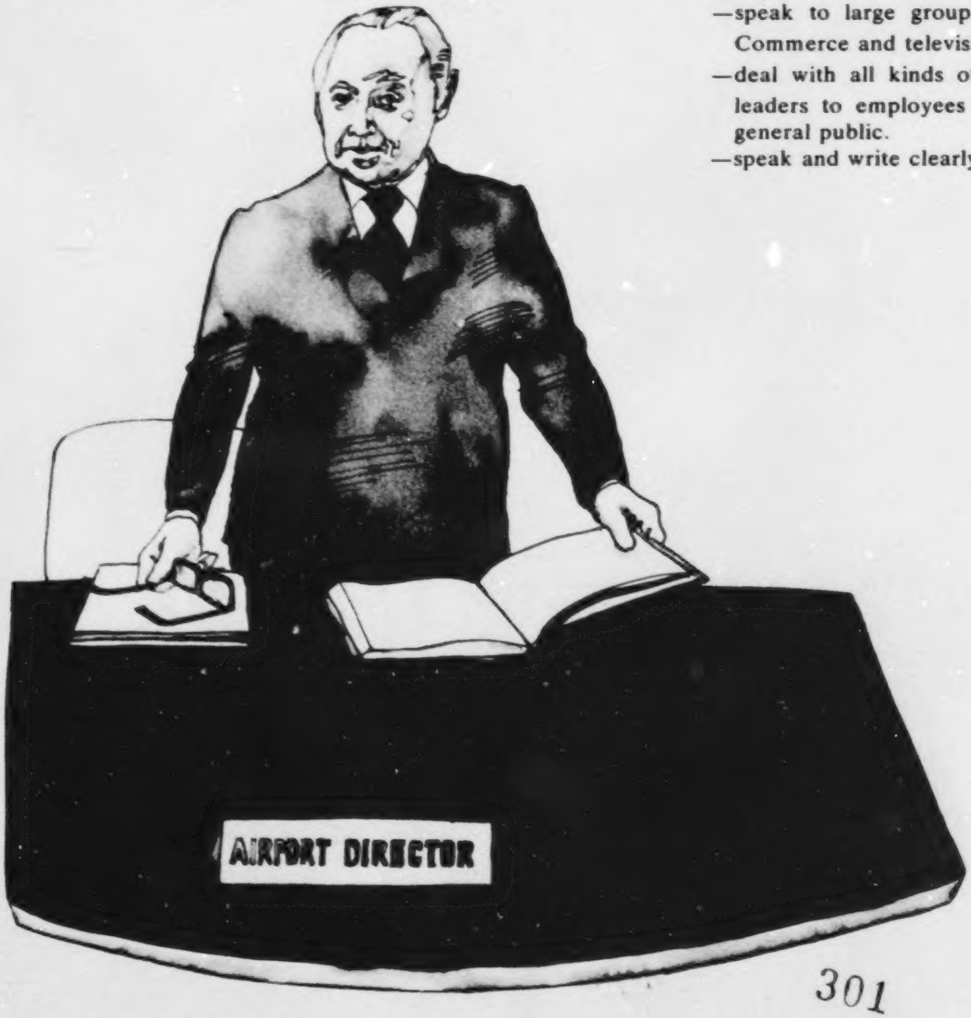
11.05 Business Administration

Workers in this group are top level administrators and managers who work through lower level supervisors to direct all or a part of the activities in private establishments or Government agencies. They set policies, make important decisions, and set priorities. These jobs are found in large businesses, industry, and government. Labor unions and associations will also hire these workers.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —serve as president of a company.
- —plan and direct operations for an airport.
- —administer city government according to policies set by city council or other elected officials.
- —direct the business affairs of a university.
- —approve the purchase of goods or services needed by a government agency.
- —direct all sales activities of a company.
- —plan and coordinate conventions, trade exhibits, and workshops for a professional association.



What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —think logically to make decisions.
- —interpret information in mathematical, written, and diagram form, such as statistical reports, profit and loss statements, financial statements, and credit regulations.
- —understand the effect politics and economic trends will have on company or agency plans.
- —continually make decisions based on experience and personal feelings as well as on facts and figures.
- —speak to large groups, such as the Chamber of Commerce and television audiences.
- —deal with all kinds of people ranging from civic leaders to employees and from legislators to the general public.
- —speak and write clearly and with authority.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you been president or treasurer of a club or social organization? Can you work with others to develop policies and plan programs of action?
- —Have you taken business administration courses? Were you able to understand and contribute to class discussions about business practices?
- —Have you read the business section of news magazines or newspapers? Do you understand the terms used?
- —Have you supervised the activities of others? Were the activities carried out effectively?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most jobs in this group require experience in related positions, usually within the same establishment, industry, or specialization. Degrees in business administration or law provide preparation for many jobs in this group. However, some administrative jobs require training and experience in such fields as engineering, chemistry, or sociology.

Some businesses offer management-trainee programs to advance employees to management positions. Some employers accept inexperienced college graduates with business degrees and place them in these training programs.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group have heavy responsibilities. They may have to work long hours to meet specific situations or to solve problems. They may have to travel to different parts of the country or even to foreign countries to attend meetings and conduct businesses.

These workers sometimes change employers in order to move up the promotion ladder. These changes often require workers to relocate.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definition in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.06 Finance

Workers in this group use mathematical and analytical skills to design financial systems and examine and interpret financial records. They are concerned with accounting and auditing activities, records systems analysis, risk and profit analyses, brokering, and budget and financial control. They find employment in banks, loan companies, investment firms, colleges, government agencies, and miscellaneous business firms. Some workers, like accountants and appraisers are self-employed.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —design an accounting system for a business to provide complete financial records.
- —analyze financial records to prepare a financial status report.
- —appraise materials and equipment to determine the total value of a business firm.
- —analyze credit information to determine risk involved in lending money.
- —study information to set schedules and rates for the transportation of merchandise and passengers.
- —administer loan funds of a college or university and make arrangements for repayment.
- —provide financial counseling to individuals in debt.
- —regulate the cash flow in a bank by keeping loans, deposits, and Federal Reserve notes in balance.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —understand and use mathematical concepts in order to design a financial or economic system.
- —interpret technical information presented in mathematical or diagram form in order to work with things like real estate property values, parimutual betting systems and stock market reports.
- —work math problems quickly and accurately.
- —understand and use computers and related equipment.
- —speak and write clearly to report financial information.
- —make decisions about the value of real estate and personal property based on inspection of the property, how you think its location will be affected by future plans of the community, as well as established facts like past tax values.
- —plan and direct the work of accounting clerks and other workers.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you had a checking or savings account? Did your balance always agree with the bank statement?
- —Have you budgeted your own spending? Does your budget work?
- —Have you had courses in accounting or bookkeeping? Do you enjoy this type of work?
- —Have you been a treasurer of a school or community organization? Can you keep accurate financial records?
- —Have you served in the accounting or payroll section of the armed forces?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Work experience is a major consideration in preparing for jobs in this group. Experience in related positions for the same employer is often required. However, courses in accounting, business law, economics, and investments are helpful. Some of these courses are available in high schools, but most are offered by business schools and colleges.

Some jobs in this group require licenses or certificates. Qualifications for credentials vary from state to state.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Jobs in this group are in offices which are usually well-lighted and ventilated. Some workers may be exposed to the noise of office machines. Other workers may have private offices.

Most of the work is detailed and workers may develop eyestrain if proper precautions are not taken.

The majority of these positions are salaried. Workers are seldom paid for overtime.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.07 Services Administration

Workers in this group manage programs and projects in agencies that provide people with services in such areas as health, education, welfare, and recreation. They are in charge of program planning, policy making, and other managerial activities. The jobs are found in welfare and rehabilitation agencies and organizations, hospitals, schools, churches, libraries, and museums.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- administer the affairs of a public or private school system under the direction of a board of education.
- plan and direct training and staff development programs for a business or government agency.
- serve as president of a college or university.
- direct a city or county welfare program.
- direct workers who classify prisoners and assign them to work and other activities within a prison.
- plan and coordinate community recreation programs.
- direct and coordinate the services and personnel of a hospital.
- coordinate emergency medical services for a city or county.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to do:

- use language and mathematical skills to analyze

308

- and interpret financial reports, government funding requirements, statistics, and related materials.
- —identify problems and make decisions based on your experience and judgment, as well as on established facts like budget allocations and legal requirements.
- —deal with all kinds of people.
- —speak and write clearly and effectively to influence people's actions and to be sure that your plans will be understood and followed.
- —change your activities frequently.
- —plan and direct programs and the activities of others.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you done volunteer work for a hospital or social agency? Do you enjoy helping people in such a setting?
- —Have you taken courses in sociology or psychology? Do you enjoy these types of studies?
- —Have you supervised the activities of others? Were the activities carried out effectively?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most of these jobs require related work experience within the agency or institution involved. Some jobs require four to eight years of college study. In some cases, work experience within an institution or agency may be substituted for a portion of the educational requirements. College level courses in public administration or business administration are often a part of the formal preparation. Typing, while seldom required, will prove to be very useful.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group have heavy responsibility from which they seldom escape, even at home or on vacation.

Some workers transfer to other agencies or institutions in order to move up the promotion ladder.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.08 Communications

Workers in this group write, edit, report and translate factual information. They find employment with radio and television broadcasting stations, newspapers, and publishing firms. Government agencies and professional groups provide some opportunities as do large firms which publish company newspapers and brochures.

UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT'S OFFICE

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —rush to the scene of important happenings to gather information and write news stories.

—analyze news, attend public gatherings, interview public personalities and write a column for newspapers.
—examine materials received from foreign broadcasts and select and edit them for local use.
—supervise workers who gather information and write scripts for news, special events, and public affairs broadcasts.
—gather, analyze, select, arrange, and broadcast news for a television station.
—translate spoken or written information from one language into another.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—think logically to analyze written materials, organize facts, and interpret a wide variety of subject matter.
—understand and use a large vocabulary, sometimes in a technical or scientific language.
—speak clearly and easily when interviewing people and broadcasting news events.
—speak and write in a foreign language is an occasional requirement.
—see punctuation and spelling errors in written materials.
—identify the important and newsworthy aspects of a situation.
—change assignments and duties frequently.
—accept responsibility for the direction and planning of an activity.
—use accurate grammar, punctuation, spelling, and sentence structure.
—use words so that your readers and listeners have a clear mental picture of your ideas.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you worked on a school newspaper? Can you report events accurately?
- —Have you had courses in journalism or broadcasting? Did these courses increase your interests in this type of writing?
- —Have you proofread term papers or compositions? Can you spot errors in punctuation, spelling, or grammar?
- —Have you spoken in front of an audience? Can you speak clearly when presenting a point of view?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. College level courses such as journalism, English, and political science are usually required. In some cases, a four-year college degree is necessary for employment. However, writing or broadcasting experience is sometimes accepted. Some jobs in this group are open to people with experience gained in high school English or journalism courses, or by working on school newspapers. Some jobs require specific knowledge in areas such as current events, in addition to writing skills. Special courses, such as speech, may be required for some jobs.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Field work, such as that done by news reporters, will often require standing for long periods of time, walking considerable distance, and being exposed to all kinds of weather. Reporters are also exposed to hazards when reporting on fires, floods, and similar situations.

Workers in this group may be required to work nights or weekends. They are usually required to reflect the policies and points of view of their employers.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.09 Promotion

Workers in this group raise money, advertise products, and services, and influence people in their actions or thoughts. They find employment in business and industry, with advertising agencies, professional groups, unions, colleges, and government agencies.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —promote a business or industry by speaking to groups.
- —plan and direct activities in an advertising agency.
- —lobby for or against legislation for an industry, organization, or profession.
- —develop plans for increasing the membership of an organization.
- —write news releases, scripts, and other materials for an advertising campaign.
- —develop materials to help dealers and distributors plan sales campaigns.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to do:

- —originate and carry out sales campaigns.
- —create new ways of presenting information that will attract peoples' attention.
- —speak and write clearly and convincingly.
- —frequently change from one activity to another, for example, writing a speech, giving a speech, and writing a report of campaign progress.

- —understand how different kinds of people react to words, pictures, and color.
- —work with all kinds of people.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you organized and directed ticket sales for a school or community event? Can you lead others in this type of activity?
- —Have you made posters for a school or community activity? Did you use your own ideas in making them?
- —Have you written advertising copy for a school yearbook or community newspaper?
- —Have you worked for a political campaign? Can you understand and influence the public?
- —Have you made ideas, products, or services better known and more acceptable to others?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from four years to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Education at the college level would assist in entering this field. Another way to enter these jobs is to start at a related job in a public relations agency. Special courses in oral and visual communications may sometimes be required. The time needed to gain the necessary combination of education and experience may be as long as ten years. Typing is rarely a required skill, but being able to type will make many duties easier to perform, especially those concerned with public relations.

Employers often seek workers who have a favorable reputation in the field. Workers sometimes change employers in order to get better jobs.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Deadlines and performance standards often put pressure on these workers. Long hours and weekend work are not unusual in these situations.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.10 Regulations Enforcement

Workers in this group enforce government regulations and company policies that affect peoples' rights, health and safety, and finances. They examine records, inspect products, and investigate services, but do not engage in police work. Most workers find employment with government agencies, licensing departments, and health departments. Some are employed by retail establishments, mines, transportation companies, and non-profit organizations.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —regulate the entry of people into the United States according to immigration laws.

—investigate employment practices to enforce equal employment opportunity laws.
—observe employees of a bus company to see that company rules are being followed.
—investigate shortages of cash, materials, tools, or equipment in a production or sales company.
—inspect buildings and equipment to detect fire hazards.
—direct the examination of insurance companies to see that state regulations are being followed.
—investigate animal cruelty and neglect complaints.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—think logically and apply technical knowledge when making investigations and inspections.
—establish facts and draw conclusions based on information collected.
—read and understand the laws and regulations to be enforced.
—write and speak clearly.
—make decisions based on laws and regulations.
—make decisions based on personal experience and your own opinions.
—cope with a variety of duties, such as questioning people, looking at the physical conditions in a manufacturing plant to identify hazards, and writing reports.
—deal with all kinds of people pleasantly but firmly.
—standing or walking for long periods of time.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you been in charge of a group or class? Can you enforce rules and regulations according to instructions?
—Have you been a member of an environmental or a consumer group? Would you like a job which promotes these interests?
—Have you taken courses in government, political science, or environmental health? Do you think rules and regulations are important?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one year to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. The education and experience requirements vary greatly among the jobs in this group. Some jobs require prior knowledge of the regulations to be enforced and the procedures to be used. Others require special training such as insurance underwriting. Clerical and other workers within a company or government agency are sometimes promoted to positions in this group. Other jobs require skills and knowledges that are identified by special tests.

Many of the jobs in this group are in government agencies and are filled by those who qualify through civil service examinations. Some jobs are filled by appointment.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some workers are required to wear uniforms. Some jobs involve shift work. Some workers sit at a desk in a comfortable office most of the day, while others must go from one place to another in order to inspect licenses and determine regulation compliance of people like beauty operators and food service workers. Other workers are stationed at inspection locations, such as port-of-entry and border crossings.

11.11 Business Management

Workers in this group manage a business, such as a store or cemetery, a branch of a large company, such as a local office for a credit corporation, or a department within a company, such as a warehouse. They usually carry out operating policies and procedures determined by administrative workers, such as presidents, vice-presidents and directors. Some managers own their own businesses and are considered self-employed. Managers find employment in all kinds of businesses as well as government agencies.

SERVICE MANAGER

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —coordinate the disposal of surplus government property.
- —manage a cemetery.
- —manage a beauty or barber shop.
- —prepare an operating budget for a freight terminal where ships or trucks are unloaded.
- —determine the need for hiring additional employees for a hotel or motel.
- —operate a branch store according to the policies set by the home office.
- —oversee the operation of a recreation establishment, like a skating rink or golf club.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —read and interpret business records and statistical reports.
- —use mathematical skills to interpret financial information and prepare budgets.
- —analyze and interpret policies established by administrators.
- —understand the government regulations covering business operations.
- —make business decisions based on production reports and similar facts.
- —make business decisions based on your own experience and personal opinion.
- —see differences in widths and lengths of lines such as those on graphs.
- —deal with the general public, customers, employees, union and government officials with tact and courtesy.
- —plan and organize the work of others.
- —change activity frequently and cope with interruptions.
- —speak and write clearly.
- —accept the full responsibility for managing an activity.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you been in charge of a committee or group activity? Were you able to get others to work well together?
- —Have you been class president or treasurer of a club or group? Are you able to use judgment to make decisions?
- —Have you planned and organized a project? Do you enjoy this type of activity?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from one to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Nearly all the jobs in this group are entered by promotion or by transfer from related jobs. A college education is not always essential, but may be helpful. Employers usually require applicants to have a high school education or its equal, combined with experience. Experience requirements vary from one to ten years. For some jobs, experience is accepted as a substitute for a high school or college education.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Workers in this group often work more than a standard 40 hour week. They must vary work hours because of emergencies, accidents, or staff shortages. Workers usually are not paid for overtime.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

11.12 Contracts and Claims

Workers in this group negotiate contracts and settle claims for companies and individuals. Some make arrangements for agreements between buyers and sellers. Others investigate claims involving damage, injury, and losses. Jobs are found in insurance and transportation companies; businesses; construction companies; and government agencies. Some are found in booking agencies. These agents are frequently self-employed.

What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might —interview property holders and settle damage claims resulting from prospecting or drilling for oil.

—negotiate with communities to rent a site for a circus.
—negotiate leases for the use of a city arena or auditorium.
—arrange leases of sites for billboards.
—arrange contracts for the appearance of musicians for a concert or show.
—serve as agent for artists, musicians, or actors and negotiate bookings for them.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—understand laws used in writing contracts and settling claims.
—compute costs and prepare cost estimates.
—understand detailed legal information.
—persuade others to agree to terms.
—speak clearly to avoid misunderstandings.
—use your experience and judgment to make decisions.
—work with all kinds of people.
—make decisions based on repair estimates, doctors' statements, and other verifiable information.
—keep accurate records and write detailed reports.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you taken courses in business law? Did you understand the special concepts and terms used in the course?
—Have you argued a point of view in front of a group? Are you persuasive and able to gain the respect and confidence of others?

—Have you helped arrange for a group to entertain at a school or community function? Were the arrangements understood by all parties?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from two to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Most jobs in this group require experience in insurance, real estate, and labor relations. Community colleges offer courses in some of these fields. The type and amount of education required varies among the jobs. Some require four or more years of college or university study.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Some jobs in this group require workers to travel frequently. Pay may be based on salary, commission, or a combination of the two. A civil service examination is usually required for jobs in government.

If you think you would like to do this kind of work, look at the job titles listed on the following pages. Select those that interest you, and read their definitions in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

—give karate lessons to an individual or group.
—teach people how to ski.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

—master all the rules of a particular game or sport and interpret them accurately.
—make official decisions quickly and enforce them when necessary.
—coordinate eye, hand, body, and foot movements with skill.
—adjust to the physical and mental pressures of competition.
—follow training rules strictly.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work?

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

—Have you competed in sports? Do you know the rules of any sport well enough to be a referee, judge, or umpire?

—Have you been an official in intramural games, physical education classes, or sandlot sports? Can you make decisions quickly and firmly?

—Have you coached a team or individual in athletic events? Were your efforts effective?

—Have you competed against others in athletic events? Do you remain calm and alert during competition?

—Have you won any special sports events? Do you excell in any athletic skill? Have others asked you to teach them that skill?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from six months to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. Professional coaches and officials often obtain the necessary training and experience by working with high school and college athletic teams. Umpires in major league baseball usually receive training in special umpire schools and must have experience in the minor leagues. Officials in horse racing usually have some type of related work experience and receive on-the-job training.

Professional athletes often receive initial training while on high school or college teams. They are recruited by professional clubs or teams and work under a contract. Training continues as long as they remain in active competition.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

Often sports officials make decisions that are unpopular with the players or fans. If a player or coach argues about a ruling too strongly, the official in charge must enforce discipline by sending that individual from the game.

Professional athletes must maintain or improve their physical skills to remain in competition. The risk of physical injury is great in all of the contact sports. Some injuries may shorten or end a player's worklife in sports. Also, after reaching a certain age, many competitive players must find work in areas other than team play.

Frequent travel is usually involved for officials and athletes.

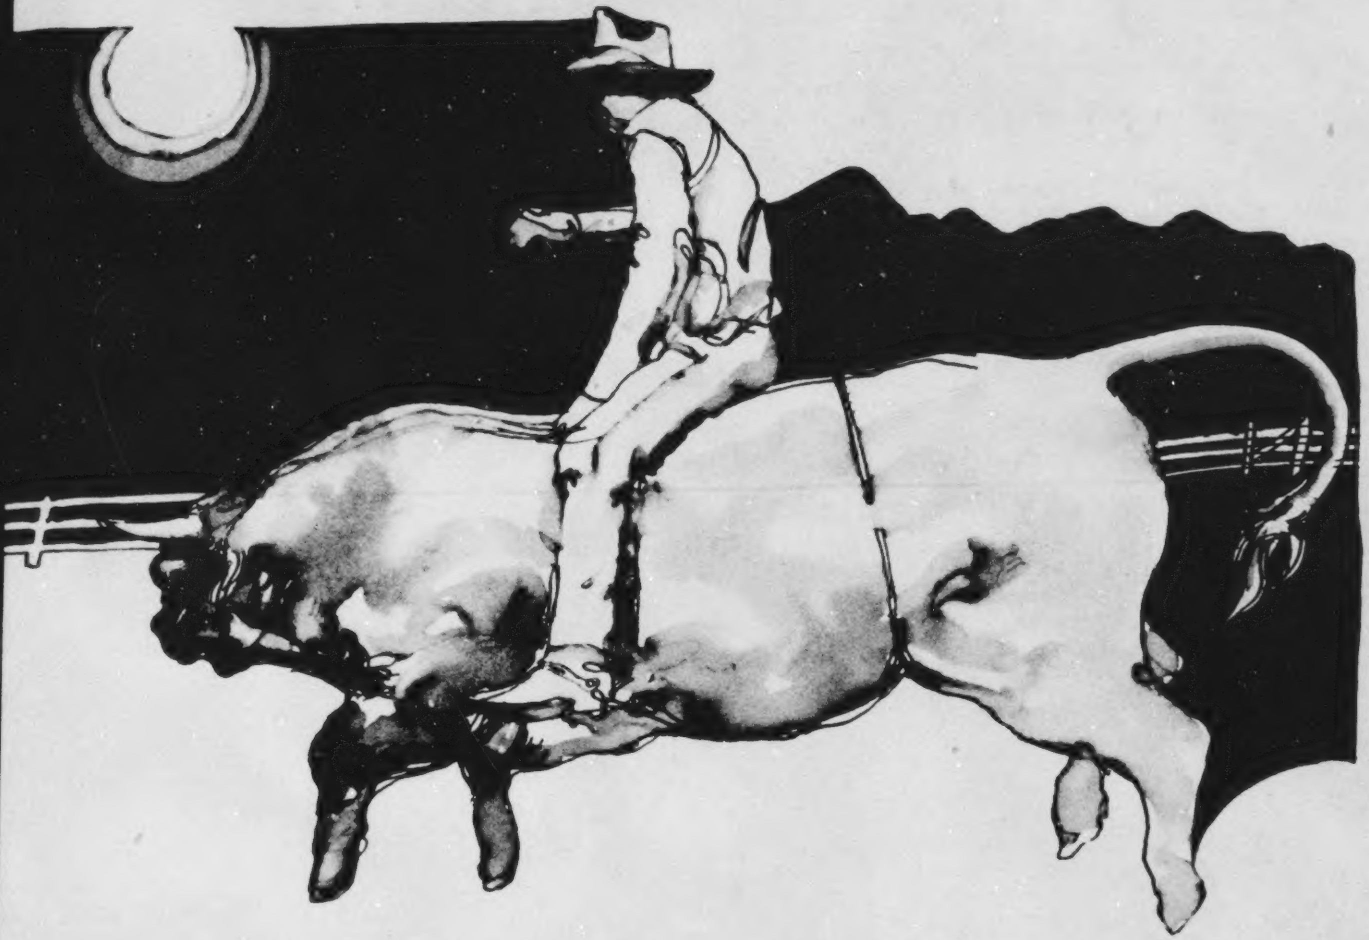
12.02 Physical Feats

Workers in this group perform unusual or daring acts of physical strength or skill to entertain people. They may perform alone or with others. Circuses, carnivals, theaters, and amusement parks hire these workers.



What kind of work would you do?

Your work activities would depend upon your specific job. For example, you might

- —demonstrate gymnastic skill on a high wire or trapeze to entertain audiences.
- —ski jump in a water show.
- —dive from a high platform into a tank of water.
- —juggle and balance things such as balls, knives, or plates.
- —perform acrobatic stunts on a horse in a circus.
- —swim in a water ballet.

What skills and abilities do you need for this kind of work?

To do this kind of work, you must be able to:

- —coordinate eye, hand, body, and foot movement with skill.
- —demonstrate poise and confidence while performing before an audience.
- —judge distance, speed, and movement of objects or people.
- —follow strict training rules.
- —take the risk of physical injury.
- —excel in a particular athletic skill.

The above statements may not apply to every job in this group.

How do you know if you would like or could learn to do this kind of work.

The following questions may give you clues about yourself as you consider this group of jobs.

- —Have you performed stunts that required daring and skill? Did you perform them without great fear?
- —Have you had a hobby or specialty act such as juggling, acrobatics, or wire walking? Do you perform well before an audience?

How can you prepare for and enter this kind of work?

Occupations in this group usually require education and/or training extending from six months to over ten years, depending upon the specific kind of work. The usual method of training is by observation and practice. Another method is working with and learning from a skilled performer.

Performers of some specialty acts such as wire walking, are hired by circuses and other amusement companies. Some workers own their own equipment and contract for individual appearances.

What else should you consider about these jobs?

For their own safety, workers must maintain or improve their physical skills. The physical requirements of some jobs may limit the number of years a worker can perform. Frequent travel is usually required.

Appendix A: Technical Development of the Interest Factors and the Guide

Background

Since 1939, the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (DOT) has been one of the basic sources of information about jobs. The first edition reflected the job market situation of the time—a surplus of qualified workers and a shortage of jobs. Consequently, the book's content emphasized the work performed, or tasks, with little attention to the requirements made on the worker.

With the advent of World War II the economy, including the job market, radically changed; rather than the surplus of qualified workers of the Depression years, there was a scarcity of workers and many jobs to be filled. Highly selective recruitment on the basis of training and/or experience was a thing of the past; acceptance of inexperienced or untrained workers with potential for the jobs became a common practice. To use every available manpower source, it became increasingly important for recruitment and placement personnel to have estimates of the characteristics or traits a person should possess if he or she was going to learn to perform the job. A system of evaluating jobs in terms of worker potential was developed therefore, and these data were published for use in counseling and placement. The system appeared in Part IV of the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (1944), entitled "Entry Occupational Classification," and contained groups of jobs that were described in terms of the "personal traits" required of the worker. Examples of these so-called personal traits were ability to relate abstract ideas; ability to plan; memory for details; facility with language; dexterity and muscular control; persuasiveness; liking for people, and so on.

In the employment service offices in the various States Part IV soon became a basic tool for assisting the person not qualified for a job through experience or training. It was also used to help in career exploration and choice, sometimes before the counselee entered college.

In 1949, the U.S. Employment Service (USES) initiated the Functional Occupational Classification project to develop a new classification system for jobs—one that would reflect not only what tasks were performed but also what worker traits were required. Some of the resulting data were released in the 1956 publication, Estimates of Worker Traits Requirements for 4,000 Jobs Defined in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles. This new methodology provided the basis for research and development of the Worker Traits Arrangement in Volume II of the third edition (1965) of the Dictionary of Occupational Titles (1).

The Worker Traits Arrangement was intended for counselors, employment interviewers, curriculum planners, and others assisting persons in career exploration. The arrangement contained 22 areas of work; within each area were 114 groups of jobs based on common worker traits requirements. The requirements, in profile form, appeared under the following headings: General Educational Development, Specific Vocational Preparation, Aptitudes, Temperaments, Interests, and Physical Capacities.

Despite the wealth of information contained in this arrangement, it was not used to any great extent by employment service personnel and others involved in counseling and related activities. First, no technique existed for obtaining information from the counselee in the same language as that used in describing the jobs, and for relating person data to job data in the Worker Traits Arrangement. Second, the technical descriptive language could not be used to help people understand themselves and their actual potential to meet job requirements in the world of work. Last, the Worker Traits Arrangement, because it was located between the Occupational Group Arrangement and the Arrangement of Titles by Industry, was difficult to use. The areas and groups were not identified by codes, and some of the titles were misleading. Researchers, however, found the Worker Trait Arrangement serviceable and have used the data in many different projects and studies.

The interest component of the trait qualifications profile was defined in terms of occupational interests identified by Dr. William Cottle in research he conducted more than 25 years ago (2). Dr. Cottle administered major interest and personality inventories then in use to 400 adult males, scored the inventories with scales that had been developed for these instruments, and factor-analyzed the intercorrelations of the scores. The five bipolar interest factors identified were adopted by the USES for estimating interest requirements of occupations.

The Cottle-based interests, however, were of limited use in employment service operations because counselors had no way of measuring interests of individuals in the same terms that interest requirements of occupations were shown in the DOT.

Some years ago, the USES Division of Testing attempted, unsuccessfully, to develop an interest inventory with scales corresponding to the Cottle factors. However, an extension of this research led to identification of measurable interest factors (3) and further exploration indicated that these factors could also be used to form broad occupational interest areas for use in occupational exploration (4, 5).

Identification of Occupational Interest Factors

Procedure

Three hundred occupational activity items were constructed by test development analysts in six State employment services—Mississippi, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Utah. All Worker Trait Groups and Occupational Groups in the third edition of the DOT were represented. As a result of item analysis studies, 192 of the 300 items were retained. Review of these items by test research and occupational analysis personnel for coverage of the Cottle factors revealed uneven distribution requiring additional item construction. The inventory that followed consisted of 307 items providing apparently good coverage of the Cottle factors.

Occupational analysts from the Michigan, Florida, and Missouri Occupational Analysis Field Centers were asked to allocate the 307 activity items in the Interest Inventory to the Cottle factors used as the interest component in the third edition of the DOT. These allocations were reviewed by the USES national office and the most relevant activity items were chosen to form the initial scales measuring the 10 Cottle factors.

The 307-item inventory was administered to 525 males and 590 females in nine States—Arizona, California, Georgia, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, and Wisconsin. About half of the individuals were high school seniors and college students; the other half were local office applicants, trainees, and employed workers.

Analyses of the data were made (1) to determine the extent to which the keys developed by the occupational analysts provided adequate measures of the 10 (5 bipolar) Cottle factors, and (2) to identify the most important interest factors underlying the 307 inventory items, without regard to the factors Cottle had found.

Results and Conclusions

The major finding with respect to the cottle factor scales was that only half of the Cottle interest factors could be measured with any confidence. Another finding was that the marked bipolarity Cottle found in his research was not confirmed by the results of the present study, which showed positive intercorrelations among all of the factor scales. Thus, the attempt to develop interest inventory scales statistically and conceptually parallel to the Cottle factors was unsuccessful. To identify the interest factors that best represented responses to 307 items of the inventory, the items were factor analyzed. Principal components factor analyses with varimax rotation (5) were performed separately on the total, male, and female intercorrelation matrixes. Results of the factor analyses led to these conclusions:

- Responses to the 307 activity items can be explained in terms of 11 basic occupational interest factors.
- These factors are readily interpretable.
- The factors are quite similar in meaning for males and females.

Development of Interest Areas

Selection of an Organizing Principle

The last step in the development of the Worker Traits Arrangement in the third edition of the DOT was formation of Areas of Work. Occupational analysts allocated the 114 Worker Trait Groups in 22 Areas of Work, based on the similarity of work performed. These 22 Areas of Work were formed to meet the counselor's need to relate an individual's traits to a framework of occupational requirements broader than that provided by the 114 Worker Trait Groups.

The usefulness of the areas was limited, however, because they were not developed systematically according to well-defined principles and could not be described in trait-related terms. More sharply focused areas were needed that would be meaningful to counselors and interviewers, clients, applicants, and students as a beginning point in occupational exploration. This objective could be achieved only if requirements were met as follows:

- Areas must be formed first instead of last in the process of developing a structure based on worker requirements.
- A meaningful, well-defined, and measurable requirement important for occupational success and satisfaction must be used in relating occupations to areas.

The search for organizing principles coincided with the successful identification of measurable occupational interest factors referred to earlier. Further exploration of the possibilities for using the interest factors in the development of the new structure led to two decisions:

- Cottle interest factors for identifying interest requirements were to be eliminated and replaced with the 11 new interest factors.
- The 11 interest factors were to be used as the basis for forming areas in the new Guide for Occupational Exploration.

These decisions, made in the summer of 1975 in connection with the initial planning of the Guide for Occupational Exploration, were significant: A specific, well-defined, and measurable variable (occupational interest) of importance in vocational counseling and in career exploration would be the prime organizing principle in the new structure to replace the Worker Traits Arrangement in the third edition of the DOT. The new interest areas would provide a much more meaningful and accessible entry into the structure than that provided in the DOT third edition Areas of Work.

Procedure and Results

The critical first step in developing interest areas was to devise a suitable procedure that could be applied by occupational analysts, as follows:

- Occupational analysts were given lists of Interest Inventory items with high factor loadings and asked to develop concepts of the underlying nature of the factors.
- The occupational analysts were then asked to apply these concepts to job descriptions for a standard sample of occupations by allocating the occupations to areas corresponding to the 11 factors. Differences among the analysts in allocations of occupations to the areas were discussed to achieve more uniform concepts of the interest factors.
- After these training sessions, each analyst was assigned a set of occupations to allocate to interest areas by reviewing job summaries and making judgments of the most prominent interest factors involved.
- These allocations were reviewed by national office personnel.

During the allocation process it became evident that one small group of occupations could not be allocated to any of the 11 areas. To accommodate these occupations, it was necessary to establish an additional interest area, Physical Performing.

Arrangement of Interest Areas

Many readers of the Guide for Occupational Exploration will be familiar with Dr. John Holland's Occupational Categories (6) and many use interest inventories or other techniques that relate an individual's interests or personality to these categories. In recognition of the extensive research on the Holland model and its widespread use in vocational counseling today, the USES Interest Areas were arranged according to the Holland categories. This was done without much difficulty because the two systems are closely related. The primary difference between the two is that the USES system provides additional differentiation within the broader Holland Realistic and Social Categories.

The relationship of the Holland Occupational Categories to the USES Interest Areas of Work is as follows:

Holland Occupational Categories	USES Occupational Interest Areas
Artistic	01 Artistic
Investigative	02 Scientific
Realistic	03 Plants and Animals 04 Protective 05 Mechanical 06 Industrial
Conventional	07 Business Detail
Enterprising	08 Selling
Social	09 Accommodating* 10 Humanitarian 11 Leading-Influencing 12 Physical Performing

*A relatively narrow area, but it includes a few occupations covered by Holland's Enterprising and Realistic Categories in addition to those covered by the Social Category.

A broad area including, in addition to occupations covered by the Holland Social Category, business management and law/politics occupations covered by the Enterprising Category, and social science occupations covered by Investigating Category.

Development of Groups and Subgroups

After the jobs were allocated to interest areas, the analysts in Occupational Analysis Field Centers were asked to group the jobs in each area. The criteria were the capabilities and adaptabilities required of the worker. Capabilities relate to such factors as general educational development, physical capacities, important aptitudes, and job knowledge; adaptabilities are tolerances to job-worker situations, including environment, routine, dealing with people, and working to set tolerances and standards.

As a result, 66 discrete groups were developed in all. The number of groups per area range from 2 in Area 12 to 12 groups in Area 05. Each work group contains descriptive information in narrative form, a listing of subgroup titles and a list of jobs within each subgroup.

Some of the groups contained an unwieldy number of jobs and it was necessary to divide the jobs into meaningful subgroups. Criteria for subgrouping varied from one group to another. For example, subgrouping in 05.01, Engineering, is based on the kind of engineering; subgrouping in 06.04, Elemental Work, Industrial, is based on (1) whether the activities involve handwork or machines, and (2) what materials and products are involved. The number of subgroups per group range from one subgroup in group 01.08 to 40 subgroups 06.04.

Appendix B: USES Interest and Aptitude Tests

(Measurement Tests Oriented to Use of the Guide)

The U.S. Employment Service (USES), in cooperation with State employment services, has conducted a continuing program of occupational test research and development since the mid-1930's. This program has produced a variety of tests and assessment techniques useful in vocational counseling and in selection of individuals for specific jobs. The tests have wide applicability and are used by local offices of State employment services, schools, employment and training organizations, and many foreign countries. Although several of these tests would be useful in connection with the Guide for Occupational Exploration, two are particularly relevant.

The USES Interest Inventory, now in its final phase of development, is designed to provide a measure of counselee interest in each of the 12 interest areas which constitute the broadest basis for classifying occupations in the Guide. It will permit a direct entry into the Guide's occupational structure based on occupational interest. An alternative instrument, a revised USES Interest Check List, will also be available for use by counselors who prefer a nonscored desk aid for exploration of occupational interests.

The USES General Aptitude Test Battery (GATB), a testing tool, can be very useful to counselors in relating a counselee's vocational aptitudes to occupations and occupational groups in the Guide. It consists of 12 tests measuring nine aptitudes and can be administered to groups of individuals in about 2¼ hours. Since its publication in 1947, the GATB has been researched in a continuing program of development and occupational validation. This research has produced over 450 Specific Aptitude Test Batteries (SATB's), consisting of combinations of two, three, or four aptitudes with associated cutting scores established as aptitude requirements for specific occupations. In addition, a system of Occupational Aptitude Patterns (OAP's) has been developed to relate an individual's GATB aptitude profile to aptitude requirements of the groups into which occupations have been classified in the Guide.

Because aptitude batteries are revised as additional GATB research is completed, the SATB and OAP aptitudes and cutting scores are not included in this volume. This information is provided in the Manual for the GATB, which is continuously updated to reflect research results as they become available. Occupations for which SATB's have been developed, however, are listed in this appendix as an aid to counselors who have access to the GATB. The occupations are arranged by Guide groups and subgroups; within each subgroup they are listed alphabetically. The S number in parentheses following the nine-digit occupational code is the number of the SATB.

Appendix C: Use of the Guide in Organizing Occupational Information

With the strong emphasis upon school-to-work and career guidance, programs designed to provide such services to youth and adults are dependent upon a sound base of occupational information. There is an abundance of career information resources ranging from individual occupational briefs to bound volumes such as the Occupational Outlook Handbook. When these resources are organized for easy and effective use, they play an important role in the process of career exploration and decision-making.

The recent emphasis on individualized career exploration has highlighted the need for a system that can organize a wide variety of career information resources and provide personalized access to these resources. The 12 Interest Areas, 66 Work Groups, and 348 Subgroups in this Guide can serve as the basis for such a system.

In setting up this system, two physical components and three procedures may be used. The physical components are

- an index card file
- a vertical file for the occupational materials.

The processing procedures are

- classifying
- indexing
- filing.

Physical Components

Index Card File. This file serves as an index for all occupational materials processed into the system. It contains three sets of dividers: one set for the two-digit interest areas, another for the four-digit work groups, and the third for the six-digit subgroups, as needed. This index also contains two types of cards: one type reflecting the DOT base titles and codes of the occupational materials; and the other type indicating other titles by which the materials may have been designated, to serve as a cross-index to the base title cards.

The DOT base title cards are the primary cards used to enter the system. Each card contains sources of all information about the occupation. The other titles are cross-indexed to the DOT base titles.

Vertical File. The vertical file is used to store single-job materials. Like the index card file, it contains area dividers, work group dividers, and subgroup dividers, as needed. (Bound volumes of occupational materials, such as the Occupational Outlook Handbook, will be housed usually in another convenient place, such as a bookshelf.)

Processing Procedures

Classifying. All materials relating to a specific job should receive the DOT base title and code, as well as the appropriate six-digit subgroup Guide code. The DOT title and the six-digit Guide code can be found in the alphabetical index in the Guide (app. D).

Indexing. An index card should be made, using DOT base titles, the DOT nine-digit code, the Guide subgroup number, and the sources of information available under that particular title. The card is maintained in the index file behind the pertinent divider. As new information is collected, it should be recorded on the existing card or on a new card, as appropriate. If the title on the material is different from the DOT base title (and has been put in parentheses), then a cross-index card should be made recording the title that appears in parentheses, as well as the DOT base title and code, and the subgroup number from the Guide.

Filing. After occupational materials have been classified, they are placed in a vertical file behind the appropriate work group (or subgroup) divider. After all of the available single-job unbound materials have been processed into the basic system, additional occupational materials such as bound volumes should be reflected on the appropriate index cards. Such materials may be processed into the system by adding to the appropriate index card the source and the title of the material and the page number in the volume.

In the event any material can be related more closely to a work group or subgroup than to a specific occupation, such a group or subgroup title and code may be entered on the material, instead of the DOT base title and code, and the material filed behind the appropriate work group or subgroup divider. Similarly, an index card should be initiated with the work group or subgroup title and code entered, instead of the DOT base title and code, and the card filed behind the appropriate group or subgroup divider. Career information resources used in expanding the system are not limited to the above examples. Any resource that is specific to an occupation or related to a particular work group or subgroup may be included.
